This is a tax at the rate of two per cent upon the gross premiums received from business done within the Commonwealth by insurance companies of other states or foreign countries. It is collected by the Insurance Commissioner.

The basis of the tax is the amount of premiums received from business done in this State. One-half of the tax is returned to cities, boroughs and townships of first class.

TAX ON LIQUID FUELS

Rate 2 cents per gallon.

NOTE:—One cent per gallon is a permanent tax, one-half of which is returned to the counties where the tax is collected. The other one cent tax is temporary and will lapse on the 30th day of June 1927, unless re-enacted.

The tax is levied on all liquids used for the generation of power, except kerosene, fuel oil and gas oil. The liquid on which the taxes is levied includes, distillates of, and condensates from petroleum, natural gas, coal, coal tar, and vegetable ferments, the same being usually referred to as gasoline, naphtha, benzol, benzine, and alcohol.

The tax is collected from retail dealers who in turn are required to collect the same from the persons purchasing the liquid at retail.

The revenue returned to counties can be used only for the construction and repair of highways and the payment of interest on road bonds.

NOTE:—The Fiscal Officers evidently carry a separate item for receipts which still come in under the first Gasoline Tax Act of 1921, which was repealed by the Act of June 15, 1923, P. L. 834, under which the present tax is collected.

INHERITANCE TAXES

(Under this heading are included all the taxes received as the result of inheritance, whether collected under the titles of collateral inheritance, direct inheritance, resident transfer inheritance and non-resident transfer inheritance).

Rate 2 per cent on direct heirs, 10 per cent on collateral heirs which includes charities.

The tax is imposed on all real property located within this State, either passing from resident or non-resident decedents, and all tangible personal property located within this State, either passing from resident or non-resident decedents, and all intangible personal property of resident decedents, wherever situated, and all goods, wares and merchandise and stocks of Pennsylvania Corporations and National Banks passing from non-resident decedents if located here or the transfer office of the corporation is here.

Inheritance Taxes are collected by the Register of Wills under the supervision of the Auditor General.

NOTE:—The item from collateral inheritance receipts, is undoubtedly retained by the Fiscal Officers to take care of small amounts which still come in from the former collateral inheritance tax act of 1887, which has been repealed by the present law.

The same is also true of the item Direct Inheritance, which represents taxes still collected under the Act of 1917, which first imposed a direct inheritance tax. The two items under the Transfer Tax, Resident Tax, Resident and Non-Resident, is a division made by the Fiscal Officers under the Act of June 10, 1919, P. L. 521, and this law is now in force.

NOTE—The Federal Government, in 1863, gave $500,000.00 to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania from the proceeds of sale of agricultural scrip, on condition that it be invested in securities yielding 5 per cent, and the income paid to the Agricultural College, which is now the Pennsylvania State College. In 1872, the money was invested in a Commonwealth of Pennsylvania bond which matured in 1922. In 1924 the proceeds were reinvested, but acceptable securities yielding 5 per cent, income were not available at that time. Securities were purchased at a cost of $500,000.00, having a par value of $481,500.00. The average yield on these securities is 4.72 per cent, or $22,701.25 per annum. The deficiency in yield between the 5 per cent guarantee and the 4.72 per cent average yield is payable from a General Fund appropriation, and the full 5 per cent income is being paid to Pennsylvania State College.

It is recommended that $48,500.00 be appropriated from the General Fund to the Agricultural College Land Script Fund and that amount together with the cash balance in the fund be invested at an interest yield equal to that which is now received on the $481,500.00. The fund would then earn $25,000.00 annually or 5 per cent, on the $500,000.00, the guarantee to Pennsylvania State College. No other appropriation would then be necessary from the General Fund. Without this method, an appropriation of $4,597.50 will be required for the period June 1, 1927 to May 31, 1929.

*Recommended by the Department of Public Instruction that amount be provided by transferring or reappropriating the unexpended balance in the appropriation for Vocational Education. Act 254 of the 1925 Legislature amended the Edmonds' Act so that the basic reimbursement of vocational teachers is made under the provisions of the Edmonds' Act. Therefore a deficiency is created in the appropriation for the Support of Common Schools and a corresponding amount unexpended in the appropriation for Vocational Schools.

Annual Report

Delaware River Bridge Joint Commission

Pennsylvania and New Jersey

To the Honorables, the Legislatures of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and of the State of New Jersey and the Council of the City of Philadelphia:

The Delaware River Bridge Commission respectfully reports that during the last year the Delaware River Bridge between Philadelphia and Camden was opened to traffic and that the earnings from tolls derived during the first six months' operation have exceeded the expectations and estimates of its engineers.

More than four million vehicles crossed the bridge in the period from July 2nd to December 31, 1926. Proceeds from the operation of the bridge amounted to $1,100,058.40 as will be seen from the annual operating Balance Sheet of the Commission which is part of this Report. A distribution was made at the close of business December 31st and the net proceeds amounting to $946,682.83 were paid out. The State of New Jersey received 50 per cent, or $473,341.41 and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the City of Philadelphia each 25 per cent, or $236,670.71.

The distribution was in accordance with the laws of Pennsylvania and New Jersey and the agreement the Pennsylvania Commission and the New Jersey Interstate Bridge and Tunnel Commission, together constituting the Delaware River Bridge Joint Commission. This agreement for the collection and distribution of tolls is Appendix "A" of this report.

The bridge was opened with brief and appropriate ceremonies, July 1st, 1926. Exercises were held in Camden and in Philadelphia and then the bridge was turned over to the public for inspection. At midnight the first vehicles crossed.

The beginning of the year 1926 found bridge matters involved because of the question of collecting tolls. The Joint Commission was deadlocked on the subject and suit had been brought in the United States Supreme Court, by the Attorney General of Pennsylvania, to compel New Jersey to complete the bridge.

However a special session of the Pennsylvania Legislature was called by Governor Pinchot for January 3, 1926 and the entire subject of tolls was reviewed. As a result the No-Tolls Act of 1925 was repealed and the contracts necessary to complete the bridge were quickly prepared and awarded.

All energies were directed to opening the bridge on schedule time, the Fourth of July, but the Joint Commission realizing the tremendous interest of the public in having the use of the great improvement at the earliest date, advanced the time of opening to July 1st. An immense amount of work had to be accomplished in the month of June but the bridge was ready for traffic.

The Joint Commission proceeded to the task of appointing a force to operate and maintain the bridge with great care. Believing that a public project could be conducted on a high plane of business efficiency, men were selected for the various bureaus with regard to ability and character. During the first six months of operation, it has been pleasant to note the comments of the public and the newspapers upon the courtesy and readiness of the employes.

Great crowds assembled July 1st at both the Camden and Philadelphia Plazas of the bridge to witness the ceremonies. Judge John B. Kates, of the New Jersey Interstate Bridge and Tunnel Commission, presided in Camden. Addresses were made by the Hon. A. Harry Moore, Governor of New Jersey, and the Hon. Walter E. Edge, United States Senator from New Jersey. The Rev. Edwin Forrest Hann, invoked the Divine Blessing and the Rev. Thomas J. Whelan delivered the Benediction.

Amplifiers carried the speakers' voices, not only over the Camden Plaza, but to the thousands who gathered on the Philadelphia Plaza, nearly two miles away.

The official party then crossed the bridge to the Philadelphia Plaza. With the Hon. Thomas B. Smith, of the Pennsylvania Commission, presiding, addresses were made by the Hon. Gifford Pinchot, Governor of Pennsylvania; the Hon. W. Freeland Kendrick, Mayor of Philadelphia, and Ralph Modjeski, Chief Engineer of the Bridge. The Invocation was by Rabbi W. H. Fineshriber and the Benediction by the Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Garland.

The bridge was thrown open to the public when Justine F. Lewis and Miriam F. Lewis, the young daughter of the Hon. Samuel S. Lewis, State Treasurer of Pennsylvania and member of the Pennsylvania Commission, drew aside a silken barrier on the steps of the Philadelphia Plaza. The march up the steps was led by little Ann Egner, the four-year old grand-daughter of John F. Boyle, of Jersey City, member of the Bridge and Tunnel Commission. Newspapers of the day announced that more than 100,000 persons walked across the span before 7 P. M., when the bridge was cleared in order that final preparations might be made for the vehicular traffic at midnight.

Promptly at 12 o'clock the machines began to cross. The first hour numbered 3850. The rush continued for several hours. The days following were extremely busy and on July 4th and 5th, 125,000 machines passed. Tolls collected during the first week amounted to $58,475.78. This did not include $25,000 advance payment for bus tickets by the Pennjersey Rapid Transit Company, a subsidiary of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company and the Public Service Corporation of New Jersey.

The Joint Commission had entered into a one-year agreement with the Pennjersey Rapid Transit Company whereby the latter guaranteed a minimum payment of $100,000 for the operation of buses across the bridge and in return was permitted to buy tickets good for the passage of a single-deck bus at the rate of 25 cents and for double deck buses at 40 cents. Buses of other companies who did not guarantee $100,000 worth of business per annum were charged the regular rate of 40 cents for a single deck bus. No independent double-deck buses have crossed the bridge.

To date the facilities provided for trolley-cars and high speed lines on the bridge have not been put in use by the transportation companies. In view of the constantly increasing number of passengers crossing the bridge daily, it is reasonable to assume that the transportation companies will consider the facilities carefully.

Bridge traffic for the first six months is analyzed in a chart which is part of this report. It is interesting to note the increase in actual traffic over the estimates made prior to the opening of the bridge. We also present a chart showing the weekly cash toll receipts.

Following is a statement of the distribution of toll receipts as of December 31st, 1926, showing the depositories of the Joint Commission.

As the close of 1926 comparatively little construction of the bridge was still under way. The details of building the bridge will be given to your Honorable Bodies in the Final Report of our Board of Engineers now in course of preparation.

The most important operation yet uncompleted is the construction of the Administration Building in Camden, which will be ready for occupancy in the Spring.

A detailed balance sheet of the construction account as of December 31st, 1926 will be found in Appendix 'B".

In conclusion the Joint Commission desires to express its sincere appreciation of the constant support and co-operation of the Legislatures of Pennsylvania and New Jersey and the Council of the City of Philadelphia which alone have made possible the construction of the Delaware River Bridge within the time appointed.

Respectfully submitted,

APPENDIX A

Agreement between the Pennsylvania Commission and the New Jersey Interstate Bridge and Tunnel Commission for the Collection of Tolls upon the Delaware River Bridge.

This Agreement, made this fourth day of June, 1926, between the Pennsylvania Commission, of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, created by and existing under the Pennsylvania Act of July 9, 1919, P. L. 814, its Amendments and Supplements, of the one part, and the New Jersey Inter-State Bridge and Tunnel Commission of the State of New Jersey, of the other part, witnesseth that

Whereas, said parties have been duly empowered by the laws of their respective states to enter into a contract for charging tolls for the use by vehicles of the Bridge across the Delaware River between the cities of Philadelphia and Camden now being constructed by said parties acting jointly as the Delaware River Bridge Joint Commission hereinafter referred to as "Joint Commission"

Now Therefore, it is agreed that

1. Tolls shall be charged and collected for the use of said Bridge by vehicles at the rates specified in "Schedule A" which is hereto attached and made a part hereof, unless said rates shall hereafter be increased or decreased as hereinafter provided;

2. No tolls shall be charged upon vehicles owned by the United States Government and actually engaged in the service of the said Government;

3. Tolls shall continue to be charged and collected hereunder until such time as the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, the State of New Jersey and the city of Philadelphia shall each have been fully reimbursed for all moneys expended by them respectively to pay the cost of said bridge and the approaches thereto as hereinafter defined, out of the proceeds of said tolls and of any other revenue derived from the operation of said Bridge including revenue received under leases or contracts with public service corporations, companies, firms or individuals for the operation of buses over said Bridge, or the installation, maintenance, use and operation of railways, railroads or other transportation facilities, or telegraph, telephone, electric light or power or other public service facilities over the said Bridge, or revenue derived from leases or contracts for the use by individuals, co-partnerships or corporations of such parts of said Bridge and the property appurtenant thereto as may be required for the accommodation of traffic;

4. The "cost of said bridge and the approaches thereto" shall for the purpose of this agreement include:

(a) All payments made through and by the Joint Commission for constructing the super-structure and sub-structures of said Bridge and the approaches thereto, acquiring ground for the site of said Bridge and the approaches thereto including any franchises, easements, rights or damages incident thereto or consequent upon the taking thereof;

(b) Interest at the rate of four percent per annum upon such portion of said payments as shall have been made out of or by the use of funds provided by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and not repaid to the said Commonwealth, such interest to be computed from the dates on which installments of said funds were paid to the Joint Commission by the said Commonwealth of Pennsylvania as shown by the records of its State Treasurer;

(c) Interest heretofore actually paid by the State of New Jersey and the City of Philadelphia upon bonds issued by said State and said City to borrow money to pay in whole or in part the respective shares of said State and said City of the cost of constructing the super-structure and sub-structures of said Bridge and the approaches thereto, acquiring ground for the site of said Bridge and the approaches thereto including any franchises, easements, rights or damages incident thereto and consequent upon the taking thereof; and

(d) Interest which shall hereafter be paid by said State and said City on such amount of said bonds as shall be represented by the difference between the original amount or par value of said bonds and all payments made to said State and said City on account of Clause (a) of this paragraph.

5. The rates of tolls set forth in Schedule "A" hereto attached may be increased under, and only under, the following conditions:

Attached hereto, marked "Schedule B" and made a part hereof, is an estimate made by the Board of Engineers of the Joint Commission of the net revenue to be derived during each each period of twelve months (from July first to June thirtieth) from the tolls collected at the rates established in "Schedule A". Whenever in any twelve months' period the net revenue actually derived from the collection of tolls at said rates shall have been less than the estimated revenue therefrom as set forth in "Schedule B", the Pennsylvania Commission acting in conjunction with such agency as may be authorized by the State of New Jersey to cooperate with the Pennsylvania Commission for the purposes of maintaining, repairing and operating said Bridge may in the month of July following the expiration of such period, increase the rates of tolls to such amounts and for such period of time as the said Pennsylvania Commission and said agency of the State of New Jersey may seem advisable. Thereafter the rates of tolls may be reduced by said Pennsylvania Commission and said agency of the State of New Jersey if and when they shall deem reductions advisable, but said rates shall never be less than those set forth in "Schedule A" hereto attached, except as provided in Paragraph 6 of this agreement.

"Net revenue" as used in this paragraph shall mean the total revenue derived from tolls less the requirements for maintaining, operating and repairing said Bridge.

6. The rates of tolls set forth in "Schedule A" hereto attached may from time to time be decreased by the unanimous action of all of the members of the Pennsylvania Commission and of such agency as may be designated by the State of New Jersey to co-operate with the Pennsylvania Commission for the purposes of maintaining, repairing and operating the said Bridge, except that the rates of tolls for passenger vehicles not operated as common carriers shall never be less than those set forth in "Schedule A" hereto attached.

7. Immediately upon the completion of the said Bridge and the payment by the Joint Commission of all amounts due on account of the cost of said Bridge and the approaches thereto (exclusive of interest to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, the State of New Jersey and the City of Philadelphia), the parties hereto shall execute a supplement to this agreement setting forth the total amount (excluding interest not yet accrued to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania or not yet paid by the State of New Jersey and the City of Philadelphia), which the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, the State of New Jersey and the City of Philadelphia will be entitled to receive to reimburse them respectively as provided in this agreement. Said Supplement shall be known as "Schedule C".

8. All income derived from the operation of said Bridge shall be deposited in such depositories as may be designated by the Pennsylvania Commission acting in conjunction with such agency as may be authorized by the State of New Jersey to co-operate with the Pennsylvania Commission for the purpose of maintaining, repairing and operating said Bridge, all such deposits to carry interest which shall be credited to the principal sum on deposit.

9. The Pennsylvania Commission acting in conjunction with such agency as may be authorized by the State of New Jersey to co-operate with the Pennsylvania Commission for the purposes of maintaining, repairing and operating the said Bridge shall pay out of the income derived from the operation of said Bridge all expenses which they shall deem necessary for the proper maintenance, repair and operation of said Bridge.

10. The Pennsylvania Commission acting in conjunction with such agency as may be authorized by the State of New Jersey to co-operate with the Pennsylvania Commission for the purpose of maintaining, repairing and operating said Bridge shall as often as they deem it advisable but at least semi-annually make distribution of all revenue derived from the operation of said Bridge in excess of the requirements for maintenance, repairs and operation in the following manner:

(a) One-half thereof be paid to the State of New Jersey, said payment being made into such funds or to such persons as the Legislature of New Jersey may designate or has designated; one-fourth thereof shall be paid into the general fund of the State Treasury of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, or into such other fund or funds as the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania shall from time to time direct; one-fourth thereof shall be paid to the City of Philadelphia, said payment being made into such funds or to such persons as the Council of Philadelphia shall designate.

(b) Said payments shall continue until such time as either the State of New Jersey, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania or the City of Philadelphia shall have been fully reimbursed for the amount due to said State, said Commonwealth or said City under "Schedule C" plus interest accruing to said Commonwealth or paid by said State or said City subsequent to the date of "Schedule C" as provided in this agreement;

(c) Thereafter, said payments shall be equally divided between the two remaining participants until one of them shall have been so reimbursed and thereafter the remaining participant shall receive all of said payments until it shall have been so reimbursed.

11. All payments made to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, the State of New Jersey and the City of Philadelphia shall be applied as follows:

(a) To interest accrued to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania or paid by the State of New Jersey or the City of Philadelphia subsequent to the date of "Schedule C"; and

(b) After all such interest have been paid or reimbursed, any excess shall be applied to the amounts due to said Commonwealth, said State and said City under "Schedule C".

12. As soon as the State of New Jersey, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the City of Philadelphia shall each have been reimbursed in full for the amounts due to them under "Schedule C" and all further interest to which each of said parties shall be entitled under the terms of this agreement, the use of said Bridge shall become and shall thereafter remain free to private vehicles.

13. At all time the schedules or rates of tolls shall be the same at all entrances to the said Bridge and there shall be no rebate in the tolls agreed upon in any manner whatsoever directly or indirectly without the consent of a majority of the members of the Pennsylvania Commission and of such agency as may be authorized by the State of New Jersey to co-operate with the Pennsylvania Commission for the purpose of maintaining, repairing and operating the said Bridge.

14. If at any time the rates set forth in "Schedule A" or hereafter adopted by the Pennsylvania Commission acting in conjunction with such agency as may be authorized by the State of New Jersey to co-operate with the Pennsylvania Commission for the purpose of maintaining, repairing and operating the said Bridge shall be disapproved by the Secretary of War of the United States, the Pennsylvania Commission acting in conjunction with said agency of the State of New Jersey shall adopt such revision of said rates of tolls as shall meet with the approval of the said Secretary of War.

15. Nothing in this agreement shall be construed to be an exercise of the powers by law granted to the Joint Commission to enter into leases or contracts with public service corporations, companies, firms or individuals for the operation of busses over the said Bridge or the installation, maintenance, use or operation of railways or other transportation facilities, or telegraph, telephone, electric light or power or other public service facilities over said Bridge; and it is hereby expressly agreed that the word "vehicles" as used in this agreement shall not include any conveyances of any kind or description operated on rails over said Bridge.

16. The two Commissions, parties hereto, agree that the Pennsylvania Commission, acting in conjunction with such agency as may be authorized by the State of New Jersey to co-operate with the Pennsylvania Commission for the purposes of maintaining, repairing or operating the said Bridge shall adopt all and any Joint Resolutions not inconsistent with the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey which may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this agreement.

In Witness Thereof the parties hereto have hereunto set their respective hands the day and year first above written.

Report of the Commission to Study Municipal Consolidation in Counties of the Second Class

To His Excellency, the Governor, John S. Fisher, and to the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives, The General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania:

Gentlemen:—

FOREWORD

Development of the Idea of a Consolidated City on the Federal Plan.

The Act of June 8, 1923 states the duties of the Commission to be as follows:

"..... to study the subject of consolidation of the various municipalities, to wit: cities, boroughs and townships in counties of the second class into one municipality, and to file with the next General Assembly its report together with an Act providing a method for such consolidation."

The supplementary act of 1925 continued the Commission for a further period of two years, gave said Commission additional powers and made a small appropriation for its use. (The complete texts of these acts are to be found in Appendices "A and B" attached hereto).

The complexity of the problem which your Commission has before it was discussed at considerable length in its former report of February 28, 1925.

This present report sets forth that after again reviewing the various types of consolidation which have been adopted or proposed elsewhere, the Commission still favors for Allegheny County "a modified or enlarged city government, with a central law-giving body, but securing local autonomy in certain matters to constituent polical units."

To solve the problems incidental to the development of such a plan of consolidation obviously required the accumulation of extensive, reliable and thorough data concerning the organization, activities and financing of the existing governmental bodies in Allegheny County. This could not be done without a considerable staff working under the direction of the Commission.

The Commission in its first report therefore recommended an appropriation of One Hundred Thousand Dollars to carry out the duties imposed upon it. To this request the Legislature responded by appropriating twenty-five thousand dollars. Even this sum, however, was cut by Governor Pinchot to five thousand dollars.

Because of the consequent lack of funds, the Commission has found it impossible to develop a detailed plan of federated government in Allegheny County, but has had to confine itself to the development of a permissive constitutional amendmeent in line with the findings of its previous report (This amendment as passed by the General Assembly at the special session of 1926 is set forth in full Appendix "C" hereof).

In carrying out this task the Commission has taken advantage of the studies and opinions of some of the principal experts upon such matters in the United States—among them Dr. Paul Studensky, Secretary of the Committee on Regional Government of the National Municipal League; Prof. Thomas H. Reed, Director of the Bureau of Government and Professor of Political Science in the University of Michigan; Dr. Lent D. Upson, Director of the Detroit Bureau of Governmental Research and Professorial Lecturer in the Department of Political Science, University of Michigan; Mr. Chester E. Rightor, Financial Expert of the Detroit Bureau of Governmental Research and Lecturer in Municipal Finance, University of Michigan; and Dr. Martin L. Faust, Instructor in Political Science, University of Pittsburgh.

The outline of the plan adopted and embodied in the proposed constitutional amendment has not come as an inspiration, but rather as the logical result of reasoning along definite lines, promoted by the study of available methods togethed with the recommendations of experts and a thorough consideration of local traditions and circumstances.

The plan now adopted and as more fully set forth in the body of this report applies to the government of the metropolitan community of Pittsburgh, the principles which underlie the government of the United States—the government of the consolidated city and county, corresponding to the president and congress in national affairs, is to be supreme in matters which affect two or more of the existing cities, boroughs and townships; each of these separate units, however, retains in large measure its powers of self government in matters of purely local interest.

The proposed constitutional amendment is however but an outline of what appears to the Commission to be the sound method of consolidation. The problem is now to apply the plan to fit the actual situation in Allegheny County.

There are in the County of Allegheny one hundred twenty-four (124) municipalities with various types of government, dissimilar resources, financial standing, physical status, etc. The consolidation of all these into a single federated government will demand not only a thorough knowledge of existing local conditions, but a forecast of the probable future growth of each of the units concerned and a careful valuation of their individual traditions, aspirations and civic spirit.

It is essential to the success of the consolidated city and county government that the possibly conflicting interests of each unit be so treated as to aid in the development of a common point of view, a spirit of co-operation and a willingness to lend themselves to the accomplishment of a common purpose.

It will not do to ignore the mental and spiritual aspects of this problem—to do so will be to court discontent and dissension, which can only result in ultimate failure and a chaotic confusion, far worse than the conditions which the proposed consolidation is intended to relieve.

For all these reasons, your Commission feels strongly the need of complete information assembled in usable form before proceeding with an attempt to draft a detailed charter. To accumulate this information it is essential that adequate funds be made available for the use of the Commission in the creation of a staff of assistants. After taking counsel with three nationally known experts in matters of this kind, your Commission has prepared a budget (set forth in full in Appendix "F" attached hereto), which calls for an expenditure of ninety-nine thousand five hundred and fifty dollars in the succeeding biennium.

The Commission hereby makes the following recommendations, the reasons for which are set forth in detail in the body of this report:

1. That the Commission be continued for a period of two years.
2. That the Commission be given effective power to obtain all necessary information from the authorities of the county and its municipalities and districts.
3. That there be appropriated for the work of the Commission during the ensuing two years the sum of ninety-nine thousand five hundred and fifty dollars.
4. That the amendment to Art. XV of the Constitution adopted by the General Assembly of 1925 at its special session of 1926 be passed in identical form by the current session of the General Assembly.

PART 1

THE PROBLEM AND ITS SOLUTION.

1. RE-STATEMENT OF EXISTING MUNICIPAL CONDITIONS IN ALLEGHENY COUNTY.

The county of Allegheny comprises the heart of the Pittsburgh District as usually understood, and includes the city itself, termed by the laws of the Commonwealth as city of the second class; three cities of the third class—McKeesport, Clairton and Duquesne; sixty-six boroughs and fifty-four townships (of which twenty-five are townships of the first class, governed by a board of commissioners, and twenty-nine are townships of the second class, under the control of a board of supervisors).

During the yeyars 1925-1926, the boroughs of Carrick, Knoxville and Westwood and the township of Lower St. Clair have by the voluntary act of their people united with the city of Pittsburgh. There are now existing within the County of Allegheny a total of one hundred twenty-four separate municipal units (exclusive of school districts) each operating under its own particular form of government.

Scientific thought is obviously requisite to the development of the whole situation, so that while always assuring the continued existence and securing the essential needs of the individual communities, the vast problems of the greater community may be well and rightly solved. The constitutional amendment prepared and submitted to the 1925 Legislature, assembled in special session in the year 1926, makes possible the co-ordination of all the underlying units for the development of service to the united district, yet is so drawn that no one unit may improperly encroach upon the local government or functions of any other unit.

At the present time, as at the time of the last report, acres of office space are required for a multitude of public servants, great buildings are used for their housing, and tens of millions of dollars are spent annually both by the county itself and by its underlying municipalities. The Commission is of the opinion that there is a great constructive opportunity in Allegheny County in the way of improved governmental action, in the elimination of waste, the removal of duplication and overlap, and the application of scientific procedure; to the end that the tax-payer may receive an enlarged and improved service for each tax dollar paid.

Further referring to this great industrial center, some recent statistics compiled by the Chamber of Commerce of the City of Pittsburgh call attention to the vast interests involved:

1. Pittsburgh is the fifth city of the nation in banking reserves.
2. The metropolitan population is now 1,315,000.
3. The bank clearances in 1926 were nearly nine billion two hundred million dollars—an amount almost equal to one-half the national debt.
4. The industries of Allegheny County alone pay over four hundred million annually in wages.
5. The Pittsburgh District annually produces commodities valued at over two billion dollars. Included in this is one-fifth of the nation's pig iron, one quarter of its steel, one-sixth of its glass and one-third of its coke.
6. The Pittsburgh District in its products of aluminum, cork, food, petroleum, clay, railroad cars and chemicals serves almost every part of the civilized world.

Only two states of the union consume more power industrially than does Pittsburgh alone. In the district are twenty-five railroads of which six are trunk lines; in addition to which the county has approximately one thousand miles of city and interurban electric railway trackage actively operated. Annually two and a quarter million cars of Pittsburgh products and thirty-five millions tons of river traffic move in this district. During the past five years construction work alone has mounted to five billion dollars, while the farm investment of the community is represented by one hundred and fifty million dollars, with agricultural products approximateing twenty-two million dollars.

Truly, in this marvelous center exists one of the world's industrial giants, and any plan which the commission presents in detail must provide for the needs, the growth, the interests and welfare of a wonderland of most vital importance to the whole nation.

To attempt to change the governmental units serving one million five hundred thousand souls by 1930, without first having made a most thorough and exhaustive study and without the counsel of the best authorities available would be folly of the highest order.

The welfare of such a multitude of people must depend largely upon their local government, and it is keenly realized that while the present governmental machine is over-organized and complicated, it is nevertheless functioning in an orderly and effective way. The Commission believes, with the necessary fundamental data obtained and scientifically co-ordinated and in evidence before it, far reaching governmental improvements and economies are possible.

2. METHODS OF CONSOLIDATION AVAILABLE.

Convinced of the foregoing facts, the Commission has during its existence, and at various times considered three methods of consolidation:

A. By annexation, either "voluntary", through the action of suburban communities uniting with the city, or by what is termed "forcible annexation". This process may conceivably go on until the natural rural limits are determined through development and which may or may not be co-incident with the present county lines. An example of forcible annexation occurred in the year 1906, when the Legislature authorized a vote in Pittsburgh and Allegheny taken together upon the question of the annexation of the latter community to Pittsburgh. Although the proposition was defeated in Allegheny, it was carried in Pittsburgh by a sufficiently large majority to overcome the opposition of the former.

B. By the erection and development, from time to time, as necessity requires, of metropolitan districts, under boards of control, to be established for particular and specified public works or improvements. This is the line of least resistance, requiring a minimum of constructive thought, and for this reason, more than for any other, has been adopted in various cities in this and other countries. The principal objection to this form of development is that it multiplies governmental units, each with a taxing and bonding power which may or may not be directly responsible to the citizens which the district serves. A second objection of every great importance is that this method does not provide for coherent planning and co-ordinated effort in the solution of the closely related problems of the metropolitan area. In the third place, it would make no change in the census rating of the city of Pittsburgh. The underlying units continue to exist as heretofore and their population is reported separately, although they are to a great extent, socially, physically and financially one.

C. By the application of the principles of federated government. This involves the creation of a central municipal government for the county (an expansion of the powers of the present county government) to which are entrusted the management of affairs of interest to the whole Metropolitan area, while the existing cities, boroughs and townships are continued as municipal divisions to which are reserved autonomous power in all matters of merely local interest and service.

3. METHODS OF CONSOLIDATION ADOPTED.

After much thought and earnest and thorough discussion, the Commission came to the conclusion that the third method is the only one adapted to meet the extremely complex needs of the Pittsburgh District.

The fundamental consideration underlying this decision is the decentralized character of industrial and residential development in the Pittsburgh District. Where physical irregularities do not prevent, urban communities tend to grow together so as to present to the observer uninterrupted ranges of factories and homes. They preserve, no matter how large they become, a certain unity. Such is not the case with Pittsburgh. The rugged topography of her site confines the heavy industries, which are characteristic of the region, to water level. The steepness of her hills defies the spread of residences except along lines of transportation which necessarily follow the rivers, creeks and valleys. A map of the Pittsburgh District, therefore, shows industrial and residential development stretching all over it, like the veins of some great body, but with extensive open spaces cutting off one community from another. Pittsburgh, so compelled by nature, possesses the industrial decentralization which city planners advocate and so ardently desire to relieve the congestion of other geat metropolitan centers. The manufacturing plants are located along the main arteries of traffic in river valley and divergent valley, each with its own separate community.

It is this fact of physical separation which gives extraordinary vitality to the independent local life of the boroughs and townships of Allegheny County. Here are natural divisions of the great area which centers on the "golden triangle".

Each contributes its share to the prosperity which creates the imposing property values of that "hub" of Pittsburgh life. But in doing so the local unit does not lose its identity. These local units are worth while members of a larger community and must be considered in any plan of consolidation.

Every motive of theoretic justice and practical expediency demands that they should not be ignored. On the other hand, the very physical features, which make for the separate existence of the local units, create problems for them all which only the strongest co-operative effort can work out.

The conclusions of the Commission are embodied in its previous report. Further study and consultation has only served to confirm it in this first opinion. Specific constitutional authorization being, in the opinion of several eminent counsel to whom the matter was referrel, necessary to the complete carrying out of a scheme of federated city and county government, the Commission prepared a new section to be added to Article XV of the Constitution of Pennsylvania. This new section provides three things, in the view of the Commission, essential to the solution of the Pittsburgh Metropolitan problem.

1. The creation of a consolidated city and county government to which may be entrusted the powers necessary to deal with all matters in which the metropolitan area as a whole is interested.
2. Adequate guarantees of the continued self-governing status of the existing municipalities, except as they may voluntarily unite with other units.
3. The submission of the whole plan to the double test of a majority vote in the county as a whole and a two-thirds vote in a majority of the one hundred twenty-four municipal units concerned.

Under this amendment there is no possibility of FORCIBLE ANNEXATION of any city, borough or township at any time. Annexation may occurr in the generations to come only as desired by the citizens of EACH COMMUNITY, and on their own initiative. So long as the Constitution stands, if this amendment is adopted, the boroughs, townships and cities of the third class will exist with their present names, and their present boundaries and have local home rule. These municipalities will have the right to exist, without interference or danger, from other communities. At the present time all municipalities are mere creatures of the State, with no constitutional guarantee of their independence, and are constantly open to the danger of forcible annexation.

In the future, under this amendment, the present County of Allegheny will be known as the City of Pittsburgh and will be given broader powers not now possible. These powers can then be exercised, at the will of the people, for the benefit of the whole community inside the old county. The new government can act, however, only when its action affects two or more communities and then for service only. It will allow the consolidated city to create parks, recreational centers, public utility systems including rapid transit, and provide the broadest municipal services for the whole county in the same manner that it now provides paved highways.

The present city of Pittsburgh, with a possible twist of name to distinguish it from the Greater City of Pittsburgh but with its present boundaries, and own municipal government, will continue to have control of its own local affairs without interference in the affairs of the municipalities of the consolidated city and without interference by them.

It is desired to make clear to all interested that the Commission has been advised through personal conference between its Chairman and the Director of the United States Bureau of Census that the Census Bureau recognizes as a city any municipality which the state (of which any given city is a part) by its laws designates and declares to be "a city" and so classifies it. Therefore, when by an amendment to the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, the said Constitution declares that Pittsburgh is a consolidated city and a municipality under a municipal form of government through charter granted (and accepted by the people) it makes most definite the assurance that Pittsburgh as a municipality will be so classified in point of population. Therefore, it cannot be questioned that the new consolidated city will get the full benefit of all the population within the confines of the county when the State of Pennsylvania by its own laws declares the municipal government to be a city.

The Commission also believes that this fact does not in itself prevent the constituent units from also getting credit individually as boroughs, townships and subordinate cities, since they continue to receive census rating for their own population, because they will remain as municipal units so declared and existing under the laws of Pennsylvania, with their own independent functions, each supreme in their own local matters.

At this time the Commission desires to emphasize strongly these two particular points of distribution.

As offered, this plan represents the opinion of a large majority of the Commission and the unanimous action of the Executive Committee of that Commission. It has been pronounced by municipal experts as the most far reaching plan for regional and metropolitan government yet devised, with the greatest possibilities of good to the whole territory. It will undoubtedly be the key to unlock the same problems in other similar districts. It is offered as the only just alternative to forcible annexation, on the one hand, and the incomplete and unsatisfactory metropolitan district system on the other.

4. PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT EXPLAINED IN DETAIL.

"A JOINT RESOLUTION

Proposing an amendment to article fifteen of the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, by adding thereto a new section to be known as section four thereof."

"Section 1. Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met, That the following amendment to the Constitution of Pennsylvania be and the same is hereby proposed in accordance with the eighteenth article thereof:"

"Section 4. The General Assembly is hereby authorized to provide for the consolidation of the county, poor districts, cities, boroughs and townships of the county of Allegheny, and the offices thereof, into a consolidated city and county, with the constitutional and legal capacity of a municipal corporation, to be known as the City of Pittsburgh, and to provide for a charter for its government".

EXPLANATION

The foregoing provision is not obligatory, but simply grants to the General Assembly the authority to do certain things. This provision gives to the Legislature the power to create a consolidated city and county government within the area now known as Allegheny County, to which government may be assigned the powers of the county and poor districts, and (subject to approval by the people and to certain reservations of the essential powers of the existing cities, boroughs and townships) the municipal powers necessary to the solution of problems common to the whole area. By so doing all possible duplications between functions of the county and the new proposed municipality, including the poor districts, can be removed. One legislative body and one set of financial and other executive and administrative officers can serve for both county and city purposes. Without such provision it might be possible for the Legislature to create a city with boundaries coincident with those of the county, yet it could not unless it had the above express authority of the Constitution, consolidate present offices and give them greater power within the new municipality.

"The said charter shall be submitted to the electors of said county, at a special election to be provided for therein. If the majority of the electors voting thereon, in the county as a whole, and at least two-thirds of all the electors voting thereon in each of a majority of the cities, boroughs and townships thereof, vote in the affirmative, the act shall take effect for the whole county".

EXPLANATION CONTINUED

The above provisions require the submission of the act or charter creating the consolidated city and county to the people of the county as a whole and to the people of each municipality separately. The charter can go into effect only if approved by a majority vote in the county and by two-thirds vote in a majority of the one hundred twenty-four cities, boroughs or townships. In other words, the proposition must be carried by a two-thirds vote in sixty-three municipalities.

This is sufficient guarantee against the outlying communities being overwhelmed by the vote of Pittsburgh. This gives to the boroughs and townships such an overwhelming preponderance of influence in determining results that it cannot be justly said that it amounts to forcible annexation of the units not so agreeing. It is based on the principle of majority rule, first a majority of the people and second a majority of the communities. Furthermore, in accordance with subsequent provisions of this amendment, the charter must respect the right of each existing city, borough and township to control its own local affairs.

"If rejected, the said charter may be resubmitted to the electors in original, new or modified form, at any subsequent election until adopted."

EXPLANATION

The foregoing is to make certain that the power of the Legislature as authorized by this amendment would not be exhausted by one unsuccessful effort to frame a charter for the consolidated city and county. Upon the proposed amendment with its guarantees of independence to the existing communities and its provisions for approval by a majority of the people and a majority of the communities affected, will be based any future attempts at consolidation. If the first charter as framed and submitted is not successful, the debate in connection therewith will bring out the points on which there is disagreement, and these may be later comprised or eliminated and a redrafted charter then be prepared for submission at a future election.

"It shall be competent, subject to the police power of the State, for the Legislature to provide in said charter:"

EXPLANATION

It will be noted that, while the next eight clauses place some limitations on the discretion of the Legislature, they are in their general nature optional or permissive, leaving wide opportunity for the charter to be adjusted to the needs of the situation, subject always to the double approval heretofore referred to.

"1. For the exercise, by the consolidated city, of all the powers and duties vested in the county of Allegheny, and the poor districts thereof, and such other powers appropriate to a municipality as may be specified therein, except such powers as are specifically reserved by this section to the municipal divisions herein provided for."

EXPLANATION

The foregoing clause is intended to make plain that the city and county government is to have all the powers of the present county of Allegheny and also all the powers of its present poor districts and such other municipal powers as are included by the Legislature in the charter. The power of the Legislature is, however, made subject to specific reservations of the rights of the existing municipalities. The consolidated city and county government, therefore, cannot trespass upon those other powers which are reserved to the existing cities, boroughs and townships, by later provisions of the amendment. It is the purpose and intention that full justice be done to the needs of the greater municipality, and yet that the smaller component parts shall have reserved to them those right and powers they desire and need for their own local use, local life and local development.

"2. For the election, by the people of the consolidated city, of a board of commissioners, the number to be fixed by the charter, in lieu of present county commissioners, in which board shall be vested all the powers of the consolidated city and county, except as otherwise provided in the charter."

"3. For the organization of a government for the consolidated city and county, and for the election or appointment of the constitutional and other necessary officers thereof, and for their powers and duties."

EXPLANATION

These two clauses are intended to grant to the Legislature full and complete power to organize the government of the consolidated city and county in the charter, unhindered by the fact that county commissioners, sheriffs and other county officers are at the present time specifically mentioned in other sections of the present Constitution. Under these two clauses it will be possible to frame an advanced, modern, completely developed, fully organized form of government for the metropolitan area; and by proper effort to secure an efficiency, thrift and economy in the administration of its affairs not now possible by reason of constitutional limitations.

"4. For the organization of all courts, other than those of record, in the consolidated city, and for the procedure thereof, and for the appointment of judges and officers thereof, which courts shall exercise the jurisdiction, powers and duties of the magistrates, aldermen and justices of the peace, and such other powers as may be conferred by law".

EXPLANATION

The purpose of this clause is to give to the Legislature the power to remove the worst abuses of the present day in the conduct of minor courts and to provide in the charter for a really modern system of courts of minor, civil and criminal jurisdiction. Under the present antiquated forms and methods of procedure, permitting magistrates, justices of the peace and aldermen to function, who are not learned in the law, prejudiced and partial, if not positively corrupt "justice" is often applied to the small affairs of those whose means do not allow them to have their interests protected. To many of these people affairs which would be of very small matter to a well-to-do person are of the utmost importance. Also, there are in our midst thousands of persons coming from other countries, who, not understanding our language or our customs, rights and privileges, when they come in contact with our government through the minor courts and receive what they know to be absolute injustice and outrage, become incensed against our whole system of government and are consequently fit subjects for revolt. It is a known fact there can be nothing which will do more to promote bolshevism, radicalism of all kinds and disrespect for republican government and "freedom under law" than injustice, especially to the poor and unintelligent, unable because of high costs and technicalities, to secure that justice from the higher courts which they have been denied in the minor courts.

"5. For the transfer to the consolidated city of the property and indebtedness of the county of Allegheny, and the poor districts thereof, and of such property and indebtedness of the cities, boroughs and townships thereof as relate to the powers and duties of said consolidated city, and to provide for an equitable adjustment and payment of such indebtedness, and for this purpose, any taxation therein shall be uniform taxation within the meaning and intent of other provisions of this Constitution."

EXPLANATION

The purpose of this clause is to leave the bulk of the present indebtedness of each municipality within the consolidated city and county to be borne in the future by the municipality that created it and which received the benefit thereof, and yet make possible a reasonable and equitable adjustment in the matter of property and indebtedness between the individual municipalities and the consolidated city. Where a governmental function is transferred to the consolidated city, the ownership and control of the property used in the performance of that function should, obviously, pass to the consolidated city. It is equally obvious that the debt incurred in the acquisition or creation of such property ought to follow the property. It may happen as a result of such transfers that the tax rate in various portions of the consolidated city will not be uniform. There are certain phrases in the present Constitution which seem to make it obligatory that taxation within a municipality be uniform. Therefore, this provision is necessary for this new sort of federated municipal government.

"6. For the assessment of property for taxation, the levying and collection of taxes, and the payment of the cost of any public improvement, in whole or in part, by special assessment upon abutting and non-abutting property materially benefitted thereby, and, for this purpose, real estate so charged shall be classified as urban, suburban and rural and assessments made in accordance with such classifications."

EXPLANATION

This clause, after referring in general terms to the power of the Legislature to provide in the charter for the assessment of property and for the levy and collection of ordinary taxes, extends materially (under limitations induced by the varied character of the territory of the consolidted city) the power now enjoyed by the cities of paying for improvements by special assessment. At the present time, cities in Pennsylvania may assess the cost of paving a street, for example, on the property immediately abutting upon the improvement. This is a satisfactory enough method of distributing the cost of paving an ordinary street in a well built up section. It is entirely inadequate as a means of financing large improvements such as through thoroughfares, boulevards, parkways, etc., the benefit of which is spread over a considerable area. This clause permits the charging of special assessments to all property benefitted by an improvement, whether or not is abuts immediately on the improvement. The large improvements which might be undertaken by the consolidated city would frequently benefit at the same time urban, suburban and rural property. The principles which govern the formation of "benefit" districts in an urban, a suburban and rural community being materially different, the provision has been made that such assessments must take account of these differences. A through highway, for example, starting from a central point in some borough or city might proceed through a region of scattered homes into a purely rural section. The influence of such an improvement on property values would be one thing in the borough or city, another in the suburban areas and still another in the open country. Generally speaking its effect would, in the urban community, be considerable on adjacent property, but would not extend far beyond the site of the improvement. In the rural districts its effect would be less intense on any one piece of property, but would be felt over a considerable district. The suburban community would offer results somewhere between these two extremes. Justice in the matter of special assessments also requires that there be taken into account the ability of the property to carry assessments, which is roughly proportional to the value of the property. A heavy assessment on low value property may force the owner to lose his property, even though its potential value is considerably increased. These facts sufficiently explain the desirability of classification of property as urban, suburban and rural for the purpose of forming assessment districts. If only abutting property is assessed, the same principles apply. In an ordinary city the classification of property for special assessment purposes is not so necessary, but in a consolidated city containing many square miles of open country it is absolutely essential to fair play.

"7. For the creation, by the board of commissioners, of districts for the purpose of regulating the location, height, area, bulk and use of buildings and premises."

EXPLANATION

This clause puts beyond preadventure of a doubt the validity of zoning ordinances which are now based only upon enabling acts of the Legislature. The authority of the Legislature to pass such acts is in dispute and cases are now pending in the courts. If the courts of Pennsylvania follow the precedent already set in New Jersey and Maryland, the whole zoning idea may be overthrown, notwithstanding it is recognized today as the only means of building cities in the future as they should be built so that property values may be secured and property owners receive protection to their investments. This clause will place zoning in Allegheny County beyond danger of attack and make future development within the boundaries of the proposed consolidated city certain and safe.

"8. For the creation, by the board of commissioners, of special districts for the purpose of acquiring, constructing, maintaining, operating or contracting for, any public property, work, improvement, utility or service, not for the exclusive benefit of any one municipal division, and for the payment of the costs and maintenance of such property, work, improvement, utility or service, there may be special taxes levied throughout such special districts respectively, separate and apart from the general city tax."

EXPLANATION

The foregoing clause is included for the purpose of enabling the government of the consolidated city and county to provide for important public improvements by the creation of districts to be served by them. For example, the drainage area which can properly and efficiently use a single sewage disposal plant often consists of the whole or parts of several units of government. Such a natural drainage area should be the district charged with the expense of erecting a sewage disposal plant and the necessary trunk line sewers in connection therewith. Similar other districts, by reason of location, might be formed for the purpose of garbage and refuse collection and disposal, for park development, or for any other general purposes as desired by the inhabitants thereof.

"Provided, however, That it is the intent of this section that substantial powers be reserved to the cities, boroughs and townships situated in Allegheny County."

EXPLANATION

It is the purpose of this amendment to carry out the announced purpose of the Commission to Study Municipal Consolidation in Counties of the Second Class, namely, to preserve the identities and existence of the present units of government and to allow them to continue in the exercise of local self government in local matters; to prevent their unwilling absorption by large units of government; to develop and make inherent in them a proper civic spirit and consciousness to the end that a citizenry may be developed in the future having a greater and keener interest in the welfare of their own communities.

"To this end the charter shall provide for the continued existence of the said cities, boroughs and townships, as municipal divisions of the consolidated city, under their present names and forms of government, subject to the laws provided for government of municipalities of their respective forms and classes, except as provided in the charter, and with their present boundaries, provided that the city of Pittsburgh may be designated by a term other than city and may be divided into two or more municipal divisions, and that any two or more municipal divisions of the consolidated city may, with the consent of a majority of the electors voting thereon in each of such divisions at any general or special election, be united to form a single municipal division."

EXPLANATION

This clause definitely provides for the continued existence of every city, borough and township in Allegheny County, except as each may from time to time by vote of their own people voluntarily decide to join some other city, borough or township. It preserves their present names and present boundaries intact. It preserves their present forms of government, except as they may necessairly be altered in the formation of the consolidated city and county government, and then only with their expressed consent through vote on the charter. It is not to be questioned that in this form of charter, after further study, the present governments may possibly be reformed and improved on the basis of new developments and knowledge to the end that they may function more efficiently and be made even more responsive to the necessities of their citizens. It is obvious that there is great inequality in the proposed municipal divisions of the consolidated city. The way has, therefore, been left open for the future division of the present city of Pittsburgh and for the consolidation of municipal divisions. Such union cannot, however, take place except with the consent of both parties. And the weight of Pittsburgh in voting on the charter, or any amendment thereto, is sufficient guarantee that it will never be divided except voluntarily. Such changes are not in any sense obligatory but simply made possible if and when desired by the citizens affected. In other words this clause provides for reasonable flexibility in the structure of the consolidated city at the same time that it guarantees "home rule" on the whole subject of that structure.

'The said municipal divisions shall have and continue to possess the following powers:"

EXPLANATION

Under this head certain definite powers are reserved to the municipal divisions of which they cannot be deprived by the charter or any subsequent legislation, except with their own consent.

"1. The constitutional and legal capacity of municipal corporations, except as limited in the charter."

EXPLANATION

Each city, borough and township in the present County of Allegheny will, as a municipal division of the consolidated city, continue as a municipal corporation, with power to own property, make contracts, sue and be sued and to perform all other functions essential to municipal existence.

"2. The power to lay and collect taxes and to incur indebtedness, subject to the limitations which are or may be imposed by law upon cities, boroughs or townships of corresponding classification, for the purpose of carrying out any lawful power of said divisions."

EXPLANATION

Each of the municipal divisions of the consolidated city, under their own names and with their own boundaries, will have the power to collect taxes and incur indebtedness up to the constitutional limits therefore, for the purpose of carrying out any lawful power which under the terms of this amendment the charter or other non-conflicting laws they may possess. They cannot, therefore, be financially cramped in caring for their own needs.

"3. The power to acquire, own, construct, maintain, operate or contract for all kinds of public property, works, improvements, utilities or services. which shall be within the municipal division, and principally for the use and benefit of the inhabitants thereof, provided this power shall not be taken to include the construction and maintenance of through-traffic streets and bridges, tunnels, subways and appurtenances thereof, nor main or trunk lines for sewer, power and water service, running through more than one municipal division, and designated as such by the board of commissioners."

EXPLANATION

This clause gives the present municipal divisions the power to create and maintain their own public works, except through-traffic streets and bridges, tunnels, subways and appurtenances thereof, which are incident to such through-traffic streets, and trunk line sewers and power and water service systems running through more than one municipal division and designated by the board of commissioners as a part of the service of the consolidated city and county. For all purposes other than those specified, each division may have its own public works and included therein would naturally be such matters as the maintenance and cleaning of its streets, collection and disposal of its garbage and rubbish. If it so desires, each division may contract for water, gas, electric light power, etc., for the use and benefit of its citizens; or, it may furnish those services from its own municipally owned and operated plants, when so decided by its electors.

"4. The power to maintain a local police force, and local fire department, with the necessary buildings, appurtenances and equipment therefor, which may be supplemental to the police force and fire department of the consolidated city."

EXPLANATION

This provision is purely optional. The local community may maintain a local police force and local fire department if it so desires, which local force and department may be supplemental to those of the consolidated city. The relation of the consolidated city police and fire departments to those of the locality will have to be developed and treated in detail in the charter. The reason for the inclusion of this clause is to make certain that each of the local units, if it so desires, may have special protection of this kind—extra facilities for law enforcement particularly—and will maintain the same from local tax funds.

"5. The power to establish a limitation of indebtedness for the consolidated city and the municipal divisions thereof, provided that the total of the indebtedness of the consolidated city and the municipal divisions thereof shall not, in the aggregate, exceed the limits of the total indebtedness allowed by the Constitution to the county and to the separate municipalities."

EXPLANATION

Taken in connection with clause two above, the effect of this clause is to continue the existing constitutional limitations on indebtedness until such time as the municipal divisions by their action alter the proportion of debt incurring power which shall belong to the consolidated city and its municipal divisions respectively. The Constitution at present limits the indebtedness of the county to seven per cent of its assessed valuation and that of the municipalities to seven per cent of their respective valuations. The consolidated city will succeed to rights of the county. The municipal divisions will retain their present debt incurring power. It will be impossible to tell in advance what adjustments between the municipal divisions and the consolidated city may be made fair and desirable by the transfer of property and indebtedness from one to the other. The matter of this adjustment, within the total limitation of fourteen per cent, has been left to be settled by the municipal divisions acting voluntarily. This is a still further protection of their self-governing capacity. In any event the tax payer need fear no increased indebtedness beyond the figures now allowed under the Constitution.

"6. All other powers not specifically granted by the charter to the consolidated city: Provided, however, That a municipal division may surrender, by majority vote of the electors voting thereon at any general or special election, any of its powers to the consolidated city, subject to the acceptence thereof by the board of commissioners."

EXPLANATION

The old cities, boroughs and townships under the name of municipal divisions are to be the residuary legatees under this charter. Every power not inconsistent with the powers granted by the charter to the consolidated city, which they have previously possessed, they will continue to possess and hold and exercise. This clause further permits any municipal division to surrender any of its powers to the consolidated city and if it so wills, to eventually surrender all of its powers, but only through and by vote of a majority of its electors. In this way the door is left open for adjustment of the relations between the consolidated city and the municipal divisions and the extension of the powers of the consolidated city, but only by the voluntary action of the municipal divisions. The several municipal divisions can work out by agreement with the consolidated city such arrangements as may be satisfactory to their particular electors and those of the greater city. It is hardly to be supposed by any one that an absolute and final distribution of powers can be made in the charter which will work out to the satisfaction of all. It is recognized that it may take actual experience in many cases to determine the best distribution of the powers between the localities and the central municipality. The surrender of powers by any municipality is, of course, subject to acceptance of the powers by the board of commissioners of the consolidated city. This provision is a further mark of the flexibility of the proposed amendment.

"The said charter may be amended by the Legislature, subject to ratification by a majority of the electors of the consolidated city voting thereon at any general or special election: Provided, That no amendment reducing the powers of municipal divisions shall be effective unless ratified by a majority of the electors voting thereon in each of a majority of said divisions."

EXPLANATION

The final clause limits the power of amendment of the charter by the Legislature by requiring approval of the people of the consolidated city and county before such amendment becomes effective. This is real Home Rule just as the preceding articles have been home rule . In case of amendments reducing powers of municipal divisions this clause also requires a vote of a majority of such divisions. In other words, the consolidated city of Pittsburgh will function by the consent of the citizens and the municipal divisions thereof. The municipal divisions will continue to be protected in their present status as far as local affairs are concerned so long as the amendment stands. They will give up no more than is necessary to the establishment of a consolidated city government adequate to deal with their common problems and will receive in return their share of the benefits accruing from its creation.

5. PURPOSE OF MUNICIPAL CO-OPERATION.

It is the purpose of the commission to provide a form of government for all governmental and municipal functions by enlarging and developing the county government as it now is to such a point that where more than one municipality is affected, there can be a genuine, unified force and control to co-ordinate all underlying efforts—not to abolish existing institutions without proper reason, but to multiply their accomplishments by the elimination of duplications, overlaps and conflicts of authority, to the end that their united effort shall result in vastly improved service, with constructive economy and scientific efficiency.

It is realized that in the complex development of our civilzation the luxuries of yesterday have become the necessities of today, and that future generations will suffer unbelievable burdens unless the vast possibilities of this industrial giant are considered and its future ends anticipated through proper municipal vision, planning, direction and control.

It is further possible, in the judgment of the Commission, to provide by co-operative effort, under the "federated government plan", public utilities, recreational, educational and health advantages here that cannot be obtained elsewhere; and that will result not only in the individual benefit of the people but in the multiplication and diversification of industries in a way not heretofore possible. Skilled men of the various hand and machine crafts are much more likely to be drawn to a center of such development than to the Pittsburgh District of today. Making the whole territory a better place in which to live to play and to work, a better governed community if possible, where the tax-payer gets a better return for his expenditure—naturally must create conditions that will draw to this great metropolitan area new life, new vigor and new accomplishments.

PART II

Activities and Progress of the Commission Since February 28, 1925.

1. Previous Report.

Following the passage of the supplemental act of May 14, 1925, continuing the first Commission, the former officers continued to function until November 30, 1925, when the following organization was effected:

Chairman, Joseph H. Miller, Borough of Edgewood., Vice Chairman, Morris Knowles, City of Pittsburgh; Treasurer, Wm. E. Best, Borough of Dormont.

Chairman, Joseph T. Miller, Borough of Edgewood; Morris Knowles, City of Pittsburgh; William E. Best, Borough of Dormont.

At the same time authority was lodged in the Chairman to appoint three additional members. The gentlemen so appointed were:

James D. Hailman, City of Pittsburgh; Samuel A. Taylor, Borough of Wilkinsburg; Charles A. Lewis, City of Clairton.

The Hon. Frank I. Gollmar continued as Secretary of the Commission, but owing to the pressure of his official duties as Deputy Attorney General, and later, as Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, found himself unable to be active in the work of the Commission, and at the meeting of December 3, 1926, presented his resignation as Secretary.

2. Commission Meetings.

Four meetings of the full commission have been held as follows:

November 20, 1925; January 25, 1926; December 3, 1926; February 10, 1927.

As described in the previous section, reorganization of the Commission was effected at the first meeting (November 30, 1925), and further executive committee members appointed by the Chairman as authorized. Additional business included resolutions authorizing application to the Governor to include in the call for the special session of the Legislature of 1925 in the year 1926, the proposed constitutional amendment; and a further study to simplify and perfect the whole general amendment proposed at the regular session of the 1925 Legislature.

Miscellaneous business was also transacted referring to the adoption of a questionnaire for submission to the various municipalities of the district, appealing to such municipalities for contributions based on an authorized rate of one dollar per hundred of population; and other questions of more or less detail looking toward the promotion of a clear conception of the problem of consolidation and of the factors to be given consideration.

The primary consideration before the Commission at the meeting of January 25, 1926, was the revised form of the constitutional amendment which had been drafted by the executive committee. After discussion of the draft, the executive committee, by resolution, was authorized to propose the amendment to the Legislature, after modification according to suggestions made and adopted during the discussion of the subject.

The meeting of December 3, 1926, was given over to a discussion of the report to be submitted as a result of its activities and the pertinent facts to be included in such report. Resolutions were passed approving the budget of estimated expenses for the next two years; authorizing the executive committee to prepare a suggested act to be presented to the Legislature; and other matters of more or less routine nature.

The standard state "City Planning Enabling Act", as tentatively drawn by the United States Department of Commerce, was discussed, and the executive committee was given power to act on same.

3. Activities of the Executive Committee.

In addition to the individual efforts of the executive committee in carrying out certain duties assigned to them, sixteen meetings of the executive committee have been held.

Three executive committee meetings were held during 1925, and thirteen meetings during 1926. The formal action taken has included, among other things, the adoption of certain arrangements looking toward publicity of the method of consolidation proposed; the preparation of a questionnaire to be sent out, requesting information from municipal governments of the district and from school boards; the drafting of the constitutional amendment as approved by the Commission, and negotiations with experts, legal and otherwise, to meet with and advise the Commission.

A complete financial report, and the proposed budget of expenditures for the ensuing biennium, are to be found in Appendices "E" and "F".

4. Constitutional Amendments.

The Act of June 8, 1923 (P. L. No. 282 at page 688) creating the Commission laid the specific duties upon that body, to study the subject of municipal consolidation in counties of the second class, and to present to the Legislature of 1925 a bill, under which such consolidation might be accomplished.

Early in its studies, the Commission concluded that, owing to the peculiar local conditions, no method of consolidation could be accomplished that would be satisfactory to the people affected, unless a constitutional amendment was first obtained. There was, in the judgment of the Commission and its legal advisors, nothing in the Constitution of Pennsylvania that properly provided for the creation of a consolidated city and county government or the existence within a city of self governing units. Therefore, during the latter part of the year 1924 and the early months of 1925, a great deal of effort was put forward by the Commission through frequent meetings, and by much discussion, also through the meetings of its executive and legal committees, towards preparing an amendment that would fully satisfy its own conceptions and at the same time be satisfactory to the public concerned.

It was not until April 5, 1925, that the Commission and its committees were able to complete an amendment that was, in their opinion, even a partial solution of their problem; but it was the best that could be accomplished in the time allotted so with the knowledge at hand at the moment, it was put in the form of a joint resolution and was laid before the Senate of the General Assembly April 7, 1925, through the Honorable Charles Steele, of Northumberland County and Senator from the Twenty-seventh Senatorial District, by special request.

For this assistance on his part the Commission feels deeply indebted.

Printer's No. File Folio 2989

No. 1261 Session of 1925.

A JOINT RESOLUTION

Proposing an Amendment to Article Fifteen of the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Section 1 Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met That the following amendment to the Constitution of Pennsylvania be and the same is hereby proposed in accordance with the eighteenth Article therof.

Section 4 The General Assembly may by law grant to the people of Alleghenv County a charter for a new city to be created by a consolidation of all the independent cities boroughs and townships within the county Said city to be so created shall have all the powers and Constitutional Officers of the present County Government and such additional powers as shall be provided in its charter which said charter shall before becoming operative be adopted by a majority vote of the electors of said county Provided however That the present status as to the corporate rights and powers of the cities boroughs and townships shall continue to exist for all purposes except as may be surrendered by them to the new municipality or as such shall be changed by said charter"

The amendment itself as presented was not fully or completely satisfactory to the Commission, since in some of its terms it was neither broad enough, on the one hand to secure the accomplishment of what was really proposed, in a satisfactory manner, nor specific enough in other respects, to properly safeguard the interests involved. Therefore, the Commission felt no discouragement or disappointment when the bill died in committee at the adjournment of that session.

The General Assembly, however, although it looked upon this amendment with disfavor, no doubt, for the same reasons that the Commission itself felt dissatisfied, nevertheless continued the Commission with an appropriation of twenty-five thousand dollars, for the purpose of making further and continued study, the said appropriation being later cut to five thousand dollars by Governor Pinchot.

When it became evident to the Commission that Governor Pinchot would call into special session the Legislature of 1925 in the year 1926, a very determined and pressing effort was made on the part of the Commission to have the Governor include the work of the Commission as a part of his call for special action of the Legislature. The original call was, however, issued without the subject of the Commission's work being included therein, and this notwithstanding the efforts of the Commission. Up to the time the General Assembly met on January 13, 1926, the Commission was hopeful that a supplemental call would be issued by the Governor and that the consolidated city amendment would be named therein for special action. That hope was not realized.

With the Legislature in special session, your Commission was advised by men learned in the law that, in their judgment, it was within the power of the Assembly to initiate a constitutional amendment, even when in special session assembled, and although the said subject treated of had not been listed in the call issued by the Governor; this for the reason that the passage of a resolution proposing a constitution amendment did not constitute legislation. This opinion was later confirmed in the Courts of Dauphin County (See Appendix "D").

Relying upon that circumstance, the Commission redoubled its efforts to prepare and present an amendment that would prove acceptable to the General Assembly, as well as to the people whom the Commission was endeavoring to serve. As a result a new amendment, being the old idea amplified and made specific in detail, was prepared, and on February 8, 1926, was introduced in the House of Representatives by the Honorable Joseph C. Marcus, of the First Legislative District, and was known as No. Thirty-four, File Folio Two hundred three, Printers No. Seven hundred thirty-three. On the same date it was introduced into the Senate of the General Assembly by the Honorable Morris Einstein, of the Forty-second Senatorial District. In the Senate it was finally passed by a vote of yeas forty-one, nays none; having been passed in the House by yeas one hundred seventy-six, nays twenty-three.

At this time the Commission desires to express the deep appreciation of its members and their sincere thanks for the support given the proposed amendment by the Honorable Joseph C. Marcus and the Honorable Morris Einstein, in securing favorable action in the General Assembly.

5. Publicity.

The Commission has appeared, through its chairman, before many organizations of interested citizens, and he as well as other members, has spoken at length on consolidated city government for the metropolitan area of the county of Allegheny. The list of the organizations addresses is as follows:

February 22, 1926	West View Board of Trade.
March 9, 1926	Wilkinsburg Rotary Club.
	Bellevue Board of Trade.
March 26, 1926	Turtle Creek Chamber of Commerce.
April 7, 1926	Wilmerding Rotary Club.
	Etna Board of Trade.
April 14, 1926	Wilkinsburg Lions Club.
	Civic Club, Allegheny County.
	Municipal Affairs Committee.
May 24, 1926	Penna. State Federation of Women.
	Citizens Training Division.
May 27, 1926	North Boroughs Association of Councils.
July 15, 1926	Lions Club of Pittsburgh.
July 16, 1926	Henry George Club of Pittsburgh.
September 23, 1926	Aero Club of Allegheny County.
October 11, 1926	Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh.
	Committee on Inter-Community Affairs and Directors.
October 19, 1926	Knoxville League of Women Voters.
November 19, 1926	Joint Meeting, National Municipal League.
	American Civic Association, Governmental Research Conference and National Association of Civic Secretaries and many citizens of Pittsburgh, William Penn Hotel, Pittsburgh.
November 26, 1926	Tarentum Book Club (Mr. Chas. A. Lewis).
December 8, 1926	Legislative Department, Consumers League and Congress of Women's Clubs.

January	18, 1927	Wilkinsburg Rotary Club.
January	20, 1927	Council of Jewish Women of Pittsburgh.
January	25, 1927	Women Voters of Wilkinsburg.
January	26, 1927	Rotary Club of Pittsburgh (Prof. Thos. H. Reed).

In addition to the foregoing, some of the members of the Commission have done like service in many of the boroughs affected, and further, the Commission has by pamphlet "The Metropolitan Plan" circularized the municipalities which would become units of the proposed plan to the extent of five thousand copies. It has reprinted for like circularization in pamphlet form an article entitled "Federated Government for Pittsburgh and Vicinity" which was written after a month's study by Dr. Paul Studensky, Secretary of the Committee on Regional Government of the National Municipal League. This was a reprint from the National Municipal Review, Vol. 15, No. 9 by permission of the National Municipal League, of 261 Broadway, New York City.

The reason of Dr. Studensky's study of the proposed plan and the manner in which it affects this metropolitan area is that the plan itself has attracted more or less national attention, and is now looked upon by many sincere students of municipal government as a possible solution of the particular difficulties of their own metropolitan areas.

Further than this, there has been wide publicity in the newspapers in the City of Pittsburgh, namely, The Press, Sun Post, Gazette Times and Chronicle Telegraph, whose daily circulation in the territory affected runs into hundreds of thousands of copies. To these great newspapers of the City of Pittsburgh the Commission is deeply and profoundly indebted for the wide publicity they have given this plan, and which has been printed in detail in their issues together with many favorable comments thereon.

Some of these comments have appeared in editorial form, and for the information of the readers hereof typical examples are given in Appendix "G".

So great has the interest in this movement become, that by special invitation the chairman of the Commission was asked to speak on December 11, 1926, before the Mayors of the Island of Montreal, Canada, which contains twenty-five municipalities. The comment which appeared in the Montreal Gazette of that date is also reprinted in Appendix "G".

PART III

CONCLUSIONS.

1. Re-statement of Findings in former reports.

The Commission desires to call attention at this time to the recommendations which appeared under the title "Part IV" (page 27) of its report to the Legislature dated February 28, 1925, and which is here reprinted in full:

The Commission further recommends:

1. That no plan that may be developed will be worth while and satisfactory unless the greater city secures credit of the population of surrounding urban communities.

2. That such a plan, to be made satisfactory, should give to the constituent and smaller municipalities proper and reasonable control of their local affairs.

3. It has been discovered that it is essential to have complete data of the functions, assets, liabilities, local needs and developments of each community, and that without these data no practical and acceptable plan can be formulated.

4. These data must be compiled in such form as to determine duplication and overlaps that can and should be removed, to locate present waste that can be eliminated and that the Commission may build any future plan thereon in such a way as to develop proper efficiency upon a new plan of government that will be practical. Any such proposed plan built upon data to be secured must be so drawn as to protect the proper rights, privileges and liberties of each constituent unit and to secure the same for the future.

5. That such an investigation will require adequate financing and should be done by a staff thoroughly informed and experienced in such work, of careful and practical judgement, and familiar with such work and such problems heretofore encountered and solved.

6. That a plan be found and made adaptable in such a way that it may aid in the solution of metropolitan aspirations and developments in other locations in the State of Pennsylvania, where somewhat similar conditions may exist or come into being.

7. Such an important study, pregnant with great possibilities for service, for the whole State, should be aided by the State, and not wholly financed as the present Act provided by voluntary contributions from the various municipalities.

8. Legislation should be considered looking towards the continuation of this Commission—a bill for the purpose of which accompanies this report. A constitutional amendment is being prepared, and will be offered at a later date for your consideration.

All of which is respectfully submitted by

THE COMMISSION TO STUDY MUNICIPAL CONSOLIDATION IN COUNTIES OF THE SECOND CLASS.

Jos. T. Miller,
Chairman.

Attest:

Secretary.

2 Recommendations 1927.

The recommendations of the Commission have already been stated in the summary in the foreword of this report. They are four in number.

1. That the Commission be continued for a period of two years. The principal work of the Commission, the most difficult part of its task, remains to be done. The assembling of adequate information and the preparation of a charter are absolutely essential if the work, begun by the passage of the proposed constitutional amendment, is to be completed. If the Commission is continued with an adequate appropriation it can present to the 1929 session of the General Assembly a tentative form of charter, which if the Legislature approves, can be submitted to the voters in the Fall of that year.

2. That the Commision be given effective power to obtain all necessary information from the authorities of the county and its municipalities and districts. An attitude of reluctance on the part of the officials of any unit to be investigated can seriously hamper and delay the work of the Commission. The Commission, therefore, requests authority to apply to the Court of Common Pleas for an order requiring the officials or representatives of the county or any municipality, poor district or school district thereof, to comply with the Commission's request for information.

3. That there be appropriated for the work of the Commission for the next two years the sum of ninety-nine thousand, five hundred fifty dollars ($99,550.00). A carefully prepared budget of the proposed expenditures of the Commission is included herewith as Appendix "F". The collection of such data and statistics as are necessary from one hundred twenty-four municipalities and the county government obviously requires extensive professional assistance.

4. That the amendment to Article XV of the Constitution adopted by the General Assembly of 1925 at its special session of 1926 be passed in identical form by the current session of the General Assembly. If this is done the amendment may be voted on at the General election of 1928 and the charter prepared by the Commission considered by the General Assembly of 1929. Since constitutional amendments must be passed by two successive General Assemblies and can be submitted only at intervals of five years, any interruption in the progress of the amendment would mean that no amendment on the subject could be submitted prior to 1923. If the amendment is not passed at this session, a delay of at least six years in dealing with this pressing problem will result.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

NOTE.

The subject of public school education is not mentioned in the Constitutional Amendment nor is it considered in this Report. That subject was not among the subjects assigned to the Commission by the Legislature in the Bill creating it. The duty assigned to the Commission was to consider the consolidation of cities, boroughs and townships in counties of the second class and to offer an act for the consolidation of such territory. The subject of public education is one entirely within the scope of the Legislature at any session to create and control such public endeavor through the Educational Code of the Commonwealth.

BY ORDER OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

A JOINT RESOLUTION

(Pamphlet Laws of 1926 No. 2 page 34)

Proposing an amendment to article fifteen, of the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, by adding thereto a new section to be known as section four thereof.

Section 1. Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met, That the following amendment to the Constitution of Pennsylvania be and the same is hereby proposed in accordance with the eighteenth article thereof:

Section 4. The General Assembly is hereby authorized to provide for the consolidation of the county, poor districts, cities, boroughs, and townships of the county of Allegheny, and the offices thereof, into a consolidated city and county, with the constitutional and legal capacity of a municipal corporation, to be known as the City of Pittsburgh, and to provide for a charter for its government. The said charter shall be submitted to the electors of said county, at a special election to be provided for therein. If the majority of the electors voting thereon, in the county as a whole, and at least two-thirds of all the electors voting thereon in each of a majority of the cities, boroughs and townships thereof, vote in the affirmative, the act shall take effect for the whole county. If rejected, the said charter may be resubmitted to the electors in original, new or modified form, at any subsequent election until adopted.

It shall be competent, subject to the police power of the State, for the Legislature to provide in said charter:

1. For the exercise, by the consolidated city, of all the powers and duties vested in the county of Allegheny, and the poor districts thereof, and such other powers appropriate to a municipality as may be specified therein, except such powers as are specifically reserved by this section to the municipal divisions herein provided for.

2. For the election, by the people of the consolidated city, of a board of commissioners, the number to be fixed by the charter, in lieu of present county commissioners, in which board shall be vested all the powers of the consolidated city and county, except as otherwise provided in the charter .

3. For the organization of a government for the consolidated city and county, and for the election or appointment of the constitutional and other necessary officers thereof, and for their powers and duties.

4. For the organization of all courts, other than those of record, in the consolidated city, and for the procedure thereof, and for the appointment of judges and officers thereof, which courts shall exercise the jurisdiction, powers and duties of the magistrates, aldermen and justices of the peace, and such other powers as may be conferred by law .

5. For the transfer to the consolidated city of the property and indebtedness of the county of Allegheny, and the poor districts thereof, and of such property and indebtedness of the cities, boroughs and townships thereof as relate to the powers and duties of said consolidated city, and to provide for an equitable adjustment and payment of such indebtedness, and for this purpose, any taxation therein shall be uniform within the meaning and intent of other provisions of this Constitution.

6. For the assessment of property for taxation, the levying and collection of taxes, and the payment of the cost of any public improvement, in whole or in part, by special assessment upon abutting and non-abutting property materially benefitted thereby, and, for this purpose, real estate so charged shall be classified as urban, suburban and rural, and assessments made in accordance with such classifications.

7. For the creation, by the board of commissioners, of districts for the purpose of regulating the location, height, area, bulk and use of buildings and premises.

8. For the creation, by the board of commissioners, of special districts for the purpose of acquiring, constructing, maintaining, operating or contracting for, any public property, work, improvement, utility or service, not for the exclusive benefit of any one municipal division, and for the payment of the costs and maintenance of such property, work, improvement, utility or service, there may be special taxes levied throughout such special districts respectively, separate and apart from the general city tax:

9. Provided, however, That it is the intent of this section that substantial powers be reserved to the cities, boroughs and townships situated in Allegheny County. To this end the chapter shall provide for the continued existence of the said cities, boroughs and townships, as municipal divisions of the consolidated city, under their present names and forms of government, subject to the laws provided for government of municipalities of their respective forms and classes, except as provided in the charter, and with their present boundaries, provided that the city of Pittsburgh may be designated by a term other than city and may be divided into two or more municipal divisions, and that any two municipal divisions of the consolidated city may, with the consent of a majority of the electors voting thereon in each of such divisions at any general or special elections, be united to form a single municipal division.

The said municipal divisions shall have and continue to possess the following powers:

1. The constitutional and legal capacity of municipal corporations, except as limited in the charter.

2. The power to lay and collect taxes and to incur indebtedness ,subject to the limitations which are or may be imposed by law upon cities, boroughs or townships of corresponding classification, for the purpose of carrying out any lawful power of said divisions.

3. The power to acquire, own, construct, maintain, operate or contract for all kinds of public property, works, improvements, utilities or services, which shall be within the municipal division, and principally for the use and benefit of the inhabitants thereof, provided this power shall not be taken to include the construction and maintenance of through-traffic streets and bridges, tunnels, subways and appurtenances thereof, nor main or trunk lines for sewer, powee, and water service, running through more than one municipal division, and designated as such by the board of commissioners.

4. The power to maintain a local police force, and local fire department, with the necessary buildings, appurtenances and equipment therefor, which may be supplemental to the police force and fire department ofth e consolidated city.

5. The power to establish a limitation of indebtedness for the consolidated city and the municipal divisions thereof, provided that the total of the indebtedness of the consolidated city and the municipal divisions thereof shall not, in the aggregate, exceed the limits of the total indebtedness allowed by the constitution to the county and to the separate municipalities.

6. All other powers not specifically granted by the charter to the consolidated city: Provided, however, That a municipal division may surrender, by majority vote of the electors voting thereon at any general or special election, any of its powers to the consolidated city, subject to the acceptance thereof by the board of commissioners.

The said board may be amended by the Legislature, subject to ratification by a majority of the electors of the consolidated city voting thereon a tany general or special election: Provided, That no amendment reducing the powers of municipal divisions shall be effective unless ratified by a majority of the electors voting thereon in each of a majority of said divisions.

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Resume of Case in Common Pleas Court of Dauphin County, Edward A. Sweeney V. Clyde L. King, Secretary of the Commonwealth.

This case was originated in the Court of Common Pleas of Dauphin County by a Bill in Equity to enjoin the Secretary of the Commonwealth from publishing in the newspapers a Joint Resolution of the Legislature proposing the Amendment to Article Fifteen of the Constitution, frequently referred to in this Report.

This was a friendly suit or test case brought for the purpose of determining whether the Legislature at a Special Session may pass a Joint Resolution proposing a Constitutional Amendment when the subject of such Resolution has not been included in the proclamation of the Governor calling the Special Session.

Section 25 of Article III of the Constitution provides that "When the General Assembly shall be convened in special session there shall be no legislation upon subjects other than those designated in the proclamation of the Governor calling such session."

On December 14th, 1925 the Governor called a Special Session of the Legislature of 1925 to meet January 13th, 1926, to consider several subjects which he specifically set forth in his call.

In spite of the request made to him by the Commission to include the subject of the Constitutional Amendment relating to the establishment of a Consolidated City and County government in Allegheny County the Governor did not include that subject in the call.

Nor did he accede to request of the Commission to include it in a supplemental call.

government in Allegheny County The governor did not

In the meantime the Commission had been advised by well known students of Constitutional Law that a Resolution proposing an Amendment to the Constitution is not "legislation" in the sense referred to in Section 25 of Article III of the Constitution. In view of the importance of having the Amendment acted upon at the Special Session of the 1925 Legislature the Commission, therefore, prepared its Amendment, placed it before the Legislature and it was duly passed by both Houses. In order that the constitutional question might be definitely and finally settled before a charter was actually drawn, the test case of Sweeney vs. King was begun in the Common Pleas Court of Dauphin County. The case was argued on October 15th, 1926 and on November 8th, 1926 the Court filed its opinion. After citing the facts of the case President Judge Hargest who rendered the Decision of the Court, proceeded as follows:

"Section 12 of Article IV of the Constitution of Pennsylvania, referring to the Executive, provides, in part: 'He may, on extraordinary occassions, convene the general assembly ....' Section 25 of Article III of the Constitution provides: 'When the general assembly shall be convened in special session, there shall be no legislation upon subjects other than designated in the proclamation of the Governor calling such session.'

"There was no mention of amendments to the Constitution or of a resolution proposing such amendments in the Governor's call, and the question therefore arises whether the language of the Constitution which prevents 'legislation upon subjects other than those designated in the proclamation of the Governor', prohibits the passage of a resolution to amend the Constitution. This resolves itself into the further question as to whether the passage of such resolution is legislation because there is no prohibition against anything that may be done at a special session of the Leegislature except with regard to 'legislation' not mentioned in the Governor's proclamation.

"It, therefore, only remains for us to consider whether the passage of a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution is 'legislation'. If it is, it could not be considered at the special session because it was not mentioned in the call. If it is not legislation, then there is no constitutional inhibition against its consideration.

"We think this question is fully answered in the case of Commonwealth v. Griest, 196 Pa., 396. In that case the question was whether a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution required the signature of the Governor. It was held that it does not. Chief Justice Green, after quoting in full Article XVIII of the Constitution relating to future amendments, says of it (page 404):

'It is a system entirely complete in itself requiring no extraneous aid, either in matters of details or of general scope or its effectual execution. It is also necessary to bear in mind the character of the work for which it provides. It is constitution making, it is a concentration of all the power of the people in establishing organic law for the commonwealth, for it is provided by the article that 'if such amendment or amendments shall be approved by a majority of those voting thereon, such amendment or amendments shall become a part of the constitution.' It is not law making, which is a distinct and separate function, but it is a specific exercise of the power of a people to make its constitution."

"Answering the contention that Section 26 of Article III of the Constitution requires a resolution proposing an amendment to be submitted, he says, page 407:

'The section is in these words: 'Every order, resolution or vote, to which the concurrence of both houses may be necessary except on the question of adjournment, shall be presented to the governor and before it shall take effect be approved by him, or being disapproved shall be repassed by two-thirds of both houses according to the rules and limitations prescribed in case of a bill.' The question is, must a proposed amendment to the constitution be submitted to the governor and be subjected to the requirement of his approval? The first and most obvious answer to this question is, that the article which provides for the adoption of an amendment is a complete system in itself, from which the submission to the governor is carefully excluded, and therefore such submission is not only not required, but cannot be permitted. It can only be done by reading into the 18th article words which are not there and which are altogether inconsistent with, and contrary to, the words which are there. Under that article the amendment becomes a part of the constitution without any action of the governor.

Under the opposing contention it cannot become a part of the constitution without the positive approval of the governor, when no such approval is either expressed in, or implied from, the explicit words of the article.'

"It is thus seen that the Supreme Court draws the clear distinction between amending the constitution and legislation. This is in keeping with the almost unbroken line of cases in other jurisdictions: State ex rel. Morris v. Mason 43 L. R. A., (La.), 648; Warfield v. Vandeiver, 101 Md., 78; Wagner v. Indiana, 173 Ind., 603; Mitchell v. Hopper (Ark.), 241 S. W., 10; Johnson v. Craft (Ala.), 86 So., 375; Ferguson v. Maddox (Tex.), 263 S. W., 888; McCall v. Wilkins (Ga.), 89 S. E., 219; State ex rel. Postal vs. Marcus, 354; State v. Dahl, 34, L. R. A., 97, 6 N. D., 81; In re Opinion of Justices (Me.), 107 Atl., 673.

"The only case directly to the contrary is that of People v. Curry, 130 Cal., 82, 62 Pac., 516. That case definitely decides that proposing constitutional amendments 'is nevertheless performing a legislative function', and that 'the performance of such a duty is neither executive nor judicial, but purely legislative.' It is therefore definitely opposed to our own case of Commonwealth v. Griest, supra. Everything required by the constitution to be done to amend it, can be as readily and regularly done pursuant to the resolution which originated at the special session as if it had been first passed at a regular session.

"We think nothing more need be said because it is clear that proposing amendments to the Constitution is not legislation.

"CONCLUSIONS OF LAW."

"1 The Legislature in passing a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of Pennsylvania pursuant to Article 18 of the Constitution is not legislating.

"2. Section 25 of Article III of the Constitution of Pennsylvania does not prohibit the passing of a joint resolution at a special session of the Legislature even though such subject were not mentioned in the proclamation of the Governor.

"3. The passage of Joint Resolution No. 2 at the special session of 1926, Pamphlet Laws 34, is a valid exercise of the constitutional right of the General Assembly to propose an amendment to the Constitution and is not in conflict with Section 25 of Article III of the Constitution.

"4. The bill of complaint must be dismissed at the cost of the plaintiff.

Wm. M. Hargest,
P. J."

This case is now pending on appeal in the Supreme Court on Error. In view of the Court's previous decision in the case of Commonwealth v. Griest, it is confidently expected that the decision of the Common Pleas Court of Dauphin County will be sustained.

Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph—Nov. 9, 1926:

"The Greater Pittsburgh movement was measurably advanced yesterday by the decision of the Dauphin County Court upholding the Legislature's authority to pass the joint resolution for the necessary constitutional amendment.

It had been contented that the Legislature did not possess this power because the Greater Pittsburgh project was not among the subjects included in the Governor's call for the special session. The Court finds that legislation connected with proposed constitutional changes is in a class by itself and need not be specified in the executive's statement of reasons for summoning the lawmakers.

This enabling resolution will now be resubmitted at the coming regular session of the Legislature, and later the people will pass upon the proposed amendment. Upon its approval a new charter for the greater city, authorized by the Legislature, will be submitted to the municipalities to be affected.

This statement of the various stages through which the Greater Pittsburgh project must pass before success is assured may seem rather discouraging, but they have, of course, been duly discounted by the leaders of the movement. There is general confidence that in due time the Greater Pittsburgh, not through forcible annexation, but through an equitable plan preserving the identities of the various units, will be an accomplished fact."

Pittsburgh Post—Oct. 10, 1925:

"Greater Pittsburgh a Step Nearer. While the Dauphin County Court's decision may not be final, the preliminaries to the creation of a Greater Pittsburgh have been appreciably advanced by its upholding the legality of the constitutional amendment resolution adopted at the special session of the General Assembly.

The question submitted was as to the right of the law-making bodies to legislate on any subject not specified in the Governor's call. The Court draws a distinction between legislation, or the passage of bills which, with the approval of the executive, may become laws, and the adoption of resolutions that are merely formalities that may lead to future legislation. It found the General Assembly had power to adopt the constitutional amendment resolution so necessary to Pittsburgh's progress.

All the existing municipalities will retain their separate identities and be self-governing, locally, as they now are. There can be no forcible annexation. But, the proposal of a Greater Pittsburgh being much more popular than it had been in the past, as indicated by numerous voluntary annexations to the big city, it is imperative that the issue be settled as soon as legally it can be. The Dauphin County Court decision promotes expedition to this end."

Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph—Nov.. 3, 1926:

"St. Louis' Setback. The ambitious plan of St. Louis to become the world's largest city in area through annexation of the rest of the county has been frustrated by the adverse popular vote. The city gave a hearty majority for the scheme, but the people in the suburbs rejected it.

St. Louis, like Pittsburgh, is ringed round by unusually attractive little communities, ably administered. The residents of these suburbs did not wish to have them lose their identities and were influenced also by other familiar arguments against annexation.

When the people of Allegheny County outside Pittsburgh come to vote on uniting to help form a greater community, a different question from the one that was the issue for the neighbors of the Missouri metropolis will be presented for their verdict. The equitably devised plan contemplates no loss of the identities of the separate municipalities. They will retain a considerable measure of control of their local activities, while reaping the advantages of closer formal connection with the greater city.

Pittsburgh itself will be one of the units in this association of communities to form a real metropolis, with the principle of joint administration preserved. It is possible that if the wiser plan had been proposed by St. Louis, it would not have encountered this disappointment."

Pittsburgh Press—Sept. 26, 1926:

"Annexation and Consolidation: The constitutional amendment for the establishment of a Metropolitan Pittsburgh, now a matter of controversy in the courts, and which must at least run a gauntlet of another legislature before it can be subject to the approval of the people of the state and of Allegheny County, is interpreted by its sponsors as a measure merely of premissive fusion over the terms of the proposal which puts its possiblities of success in jeopardy.

Consolidation, in this case, ... seeks a consolidation of ambitions and aims in public work, so that a comprehensive plan may be worked out for the entire county on those improvements, which are imperative needs of the future. In local government every municipal unit would remain autonomous.

When the constitutional amendment was drawn, there was a hope, and a reasonable one, that the creation of a metropolitan district could be accomplished, that the Pittsburgh area would appear in the census under one head, giving this district its rightful place. The checks and balances provided in the proposed amendment, the safeguards set up for each community, make certain that no division could be railroaded into the metropolitan district.

It would be well to keep these thoughts in mind when discussing the metropolitan project, that decisions either for or against it shall be arrived at sanely, and without misrepresentation."

Pittsburgh Gazette Times—Sept. 25, 1926:

"Greater Pittsburgh, First in Area. Greater Pittsburgh proposed to be created under provisions of the Metropolitan District bill that was passed initially at the special session of the Legislature, would be the world's largest city in area. St. Louis is making a bid for that distinction. If its plan to annex St. Louis County to the city of St. Louis is sanctioned by the voters next month the enlarged municipality will boast of 533 square miles of territory. Los Angeles, first city in area now, has 391 square miles, New York proper, 314, and London proper, 111.

With Greater Pittsburgh embracing all of Allegheny County, our city would have 725 square miles. We could brag about that, but more commendable would be the type of government, for the Greater Pittsburgh plan provides for local self government by every one of the existing municipalities.

St. Louis has an entirely different plan. It proposes to annex to the City St. Louis County, of which the city is not a part. The county government and many small municipal governments would be abolished, the St. Louis city government being extended to the whole area annexed. It is a scheme of gobble."

The Pittsburgh First (Chamber of Commerce):

"The Borough of Pittsburgh. The metropolitan district bill for Pittsburgh passed at the special session of the Legislature is a blessing if it is passed at the regular biennial session of the Legislature next year, and then ratified by the people of the state in 1928. As the bill proposes a constitutional amendment, its passage by two legislatures and its ratification by the people of the whole state are required.

Why would its final passage and ratification be a blessing to all Allegheny County and Western Pennsylvania?

1. Because it would let the world know that we have here in Western Pennsylvania a city-county containing 1,600,000 people to which industries may come with full assurance of getting an adequate supply of labor.

2. Because that knowledge would increase our growth in population as well as industry, giving more business and more employment to us all.

3. Because the metropolitan government would have the power to plan regional improvements for the whole area (such as paks, recreational centers, public utility services, etc.,) to much better advantages than scores of local governments not moved by a common understanding or purpose.

4. Because the present home rule in all local matters would be absolutely unchanged. Not one of the four cities (three of them third class) 54 townships or 69 boroughs in the county would lose its control over its fire or police system or other taxees. They would fix their own tax rates and have their own local governments just as now. The city government of Pittsburgh would not be the metropolitan government, or have the least authority over Dormont or McKeesport. The present city of Pittsburgh would in fact be known simply as the borough of Pittsburgh, and have no authority outside its present limits.

When the people of the county clearly understand that there is no annexation in the bill, forcible or otherwise, and that it thus differs from every other bill of the sort ever proposed, and when they realize further that it is a boough measure ,prepared by a commission of whose twenty four members fifteen are borough men, any opposition that there may now be to it in the boroughs will disappear."

Pittsburgh Post—February 5, 1926:

"The Greater City Study. The fact that the commission which is studying the subject of municipal consolidation in Allegheny County has still apparently to make an effective start after practically two years from its organization certainly should receive attention in connection with the Pittsburgh Forward Movement. An appeal from the body for funds to carry on its work brings the whole question before the public. It had been hoped that the commission would be able to present a workable plan for consolidation to the 1925 Legislature, but the recommendations were submitted so close to the end of the session that the latter did not act upon them.

A suggestion that the special session include the subject in its list for action received scarcely any notice from Governor Pinchot. Now the commission reports that what it had hoped would be a great forward movement for the Greater City is at a standstill for lack of funds for the study.

It would be most humiliating to have to say that the project which was to advance the cause of consolidation in Allegheny County put it asleep instead.

The commission in its appeal, admits that "in years past there has been much agitation for a Greater Pittsburgh." There was sufficient of it to bring about the creation of this commission by the Legislature to prepare a plan for such consolidation. It is thus most disconcerting to hear that after two years of the commission that was to stimulate the movement for a greater city there appears to be need rather of a reviving of the whole subject .....

With the Greater Pittsburgh project in such shape as that after the commission has been working on it for nearly two years, the public spirited citizenship of the community would better get behind it without delay and find what has been keeping it at a standstill."

Pittsburgh Post—April 10, 1926:

"The Greater City Resolution. The resolution introduced in the Senate for a constitutional amendment to open the way to make Pittsburgh in name what it is in fact, the fourth or fifth city of the country ,instead of keeping it in the rank of tenth, contains a challenge to the progressive spirit of the community.....

As Allegheny is the only county of the second class in the state, the subject is definitely that of Greater Pittsburgh. Every precaution however has been taken to guard against a procedure that might suggest forcible annexation. The commission is dominated by the representatives of the smaller cities, the boroughs and townships. Of the 24 members of the commission 16 are representatives of boroughs and townships. Only four of the 24 members are Pittsburghers. The Chaiman of the Commission is the representative of a borough. It is provided in the resolution "that the present status as to the corporate rights and powers of the cities, boroughs and townships shall continue to exist for all purposes, except such as may be surrendered by them to the new municipality or as such shall be changed by said charter." And, after all that, the project has to go before the voters of the county for approval. Thus let it be emphasized at the outset that any person who speaks of this as a forcible annexation scheme either does not know what he is talking about or wilfully mistakes the facts.

The proposed amendment to the constitution would simply empower the Legislature to grant to the people of Allegheny County a charter for a new city, "to be created by the consolidation of all the independent cities, boroughs and townships within said county." ..... If this resolution should not be adopted by this session, it would mean a delay of at least four or five years for the cause of Greater Pittsburgh. ..... the mere thought of such delay should arouse the people here immediately to exertion of their influence upon the Legislature to obtain the necessary action at this time."

Pittsburgh Press—March 11, 1925.

"Crisis of Greater City bill. It is to be hoped that the Chamber of Commerce and all other civic organizations will endeavor to impress upon the legislature the vital importance to Allegheny county of the proposed constitutional amendment to permit the creation of a greater city out of Pittsburgh and the other cities and boroughs of the county.

The fate of the amendment, as well as of the bill continuing the life of the commission set up for the study of the whole subject by the legislature of 1923, hangs in the balance. There are only four more days of the present session. These two bills, which mean so much to every citizen of Allegheny County, cannot get through without special consideration.

Inasmuch as both measures proceed directly from the state's own commission, and are the result of study and deliberation on the part of that body extending through a period of nearly a year, an unfortunate impression, not complimentary to the legislature or the commonwealth, would be produced by the failure of the legislation.

A large majority of the members of the commission are representatives of the boroughs, and its chairman, Joseph Torrence Miller of Edgewood Borough, has been an active opponent of any consolidated city which would deprive the boroughs of self government in their local affairs.

The plan recommended by the commission is substantially the borough plan, and inasmuch as it is fair to both borough and city has met with general approval. But if it fails to be adopted in the present legislature and its initiation is left off until the session of 1927, the plan cannot go to the people for ratification before 1933, too late to give the county its benefits in the federal census of 1930.

To prevent so serious a delay in the duty of all concerned and it is practically obligatory on every Allegheny County member to do everything within his power to secure the desired action at this session."

Pittsburgh Post—March 25, 1925:

"Co-operate for Greater City. Civic organizations of the community should without delay lend their influence to the Greater Pittsburgh project that has been advanced considerably by the commission of the legislature that has been studying the subject for the past year. No great result is to be obtained by sporadic efforts. Success in this instance will be achieved only by sustained activity; only by holding every gain and carrying it further. It is generally agreed that the commission, in the limited time permitted it owing to delay in appointment of its members—and with the further handicap of a lack of funds—has made an important gain toward its object. It has done much in crystalizing sentiment for the undertaking and in promoting a spirit of cooperation among the representatives of the many districts involved. Now, however, it is at the critical stage where it requires equipment for proceeding with the main work, and naturally it is at this point that it needs the aid of the civic organizations to secure the necessary legislation and funds.

It is vital that the civic organization do their part at once—while the Legislature is in session. Hold the gain by arranging to carry it forward. Obviously if this is not done there will be the danger, through permitting interest to lag, of losing what has been accomplished. Leaders of the civic organizations should get in touch without delay with the commission dealing with the consolidation subject to make arrangements for the desired cooperation."

"Federated Civic Government Plan

Greater Pittsburgh Scheme Commended by Chairman of State Commission

"Referring to the Greater Pittsburgh scheme of federated government as "the greatest opportunity for constructive municipal statesmanship that exists in the United States today", Joseph T. Miller, Chairman of the commission appointed by the State Legislature of Pennsylvania to study the question, outlined the plan before a number of mayors of the Island of Montreal and other municipal men at a luncheon in the Windsor Hotel yesterday.

The Mayor of Montreal (Hon. Mederic Martin) in opening the proceedings, pointed out that the fullest knowledge was necessary to help in the government of a metropolitan area like Greater Montreal, which with its rapid increase in population during the last few years had many problems to solve, not the least of which was a general plan for the whole island. Because of its geographical situation in a rich and fertile island, Montreal would soon be one of the largest cities in the world, and with good government one of the greatest.

Mayor McLagan, of Westmount, who introduced the speaker, stated that the situation in Montreal was similar to that of Allegheny County.

In its vast development there had gradually arisen on the Island of Montreal a number of municipalities that had not only kept pace with that development, but had established traditions of their own which must be considered in any form of federated government.

Mr. Miller opened his address by describing the history of the movement for a greater Pittsburgh. "About twenty years ago the City of Pitssburgh, with a population then of 375,000 in its eagerness for size, determined to annex by force the neighboring city of Allegheny, which had a population of 175,000. By an act of the state legislature a ring was drawn around the two cities and the population of the larger outvoting the population of the lesser city, the two were merged. This caused much heartburning, and when the city of Pittsburgh desired to enlarge its boundaries by taking in other municipalities, there was so much opposition that saner counsels prevailed, with the result that a get-together movement was started, and the state legislature asked to appoint a commission of investigation.

The commission, after much study and investigation, made certain recommendations to the Legislature. A bill embodying the commission's recommendations has already passed both Houses of the Legislature, which, after being passed again, will go to a vote of the people of the area affected. Under the plan, the whole county of Allegheny with its 120 cities, towns, villages and townships—including the present city of Pittsburgh—and covering an area of 700 square miles, will cease to be a county, and will become the consolidated city of Pittsburgh.

The government of the new consolidated city will be built out of the county, not the present city. The present Pittsburgh and the surrounding municipalities will become municipal borough divisions of the new metropolitan center, their present machinery of government being guaranteed for local purposes.

Mr. Miller maintained that under the new system of federated government local jealousies would be eliminated and a new spirit of civic pride created. Overlapping and duplication of public services would be reduced to a minimum and better means would be created for public utilities because of a central administration on which all the local bodies would be adequately represented.

Among those present were Mayor Mederic Martin, of Montreal; Mayor P. W. McLagan, of Westmount; Mayor J. Reaubian, of Outremont; Mayor J. A. Dupuis, of Verdun; Mayor D. Viau, of Lachine; Alderman J. A. A. Brodeur, of Montreal; Gaspard DeSerres, of the Metropolitan Commission; City Manager Thompson, of Westmount; Ald. Dr. C. H. Rondeau, of Westmount; B. W. Sayer, M. L. A.; Ald. J. B. Hudson, Ald. Ernest Pitt, City Manager, E. Lacroix, Ald. A. Grothe, Ald. J. E. Ethier, all of Outremont; City Clerk A. F. Bell, of Westmount; City Clerk E. T. Sampson, of Outremont; City Clerk J. Wishart, of Verdun; Controller Hogg, of Westmount; City Engineer P. Jarman, of Westmount; Secretary-Treasurer Fraser, of Montreal West; Ald. A. Allen, of Verdun; Controller Scott, of Westmount; Ald. Black, of Montreal West; Ald. C. E. Gravel, of Outremont; and A. S. Pelletier and Frederick Wright."

Examples of Letters from Readers to the Newspapers Commenting on the Metropolitan District Plan.

Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph—Sept. 14, 1926.

"Editor of the Chronicle Telegraph: Pittsburgh will be the fourth city in the United States if the Metropolitan District bill becomes effective, according to a statement which Mr. Joseph T. Miller, Chairman of the Commission, made last Friday. Then, by all means, let us have the Metropolitan District plan become a law.

The public should take more interest than it does in this important matter. It seems that the popular interest is more attracted to bathing beauty contests and to other similar frivolities than it is to this serious piece of legislation containing provisions for the welfare of the district. Mr. Miller's plan is one of utmost fairness to the adjoining boroughs and townships which have long fought to retain their identity. It allows them to control their own local problems while passing on the district wide problems to the central government of the consolidated city. The total population of Allegheny County, which would be credited to the greater city, would be sufficient to elevate Pittsburgh to fourth place among the cities of the country.

This is much to be desired; there is no logical objection to it. The quicker Mr. Miller achieves his great work the better off the whole district will be.

Yours very truly,

MRS. A. G. PETERSON, Homestead."

Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph—Sept. 14, 1926.

"Editor of the Chronicle Telegraph: Your Friday's edition carried an account of an address which Mr. Joseph T. Miller, Chairman of the Metropolitan District Commission, delivered, in which he advised, "Wake up, Pa Pitt, if you're going anywhere." It was a fine exposition of what the metropolitan district plan really means, and of how much it really means to the welfare of the Pittsburgh District as a whole.

In truth, it seems to me it is high time for "Pa Pitt to wake up." Many other cities of the country are working out the metropolitan idea and especially in the Middle West is the question of governmental problems receiving public attention unheard of here. I have recently returned from a trip to the rolling section beyond the Mississippi and to the far West, and must confess to a great deal of astonishment at what I saw. What a wondrous change has the last decade wrought; tremenduously throbbing communities are everywhere developing where once the rural silence held absolute sway. St. Louis seems imbued with the spirit of growth; it is one of the cities which has framed a metropolitan plan; and Cleveland's boundaries are stretching to envelop the outlying sections at an amazing rate. No one knows how large Chicago will grow, but many are propnesying that nothing can stop it from becoming the first city in the world.

All this vitally affects the future of the Pittsburgh District. We have seen Los Angeles and Detroit pass us. We may slip further back in the rank of cities, unless something is done.

Mr. Miller deserves the appreciation of every one for framing the metropolitan plan. It is what is needed to keep Pittsburgh and this district up there where they belong, among the first cities of the United States.

Very truly yours,

Clarence K. Smith, Pittsburgh."

Pittsburgh Gazette Times:

"A Live Question. If a Greater Pittsburgh is to be organized within a reasonable period of time action to that end will have to be taken at Harrisburg by the General Assembly that will be elected in November and begin its Legislative session in January .....

If the people of Allegheny County act appropriately this fall they will begin ere long to reap the benefits of the metropolitan district system. No existing political division will lose any of the powers now vested in local governments. Every city, borough and township will continue to manage its local affairs. The principle of the Greater Pittsburgh Plan is co-operation by all the 126 separate municipalities in the county in the development of improvements and betterments of common concern through co-ordination of the peoples' power.

We are confident that when the people of the several communities to be affected understand that they are not to be deprived of any of the rights they now possess and that they will not lose their identity as independent municipalities they will earnestly support the Metropolitan District bill."

Pittsburgh Post—Feb. 14th, 1927.

"Metropolitan Pittsburgh—In the renewal of the debate on the Pittsburgh Metropolitan District project, again before the Legislature in the form of a resolution for a constitutional amendment to open the way for the desired changes, it is imperative in the interest of fairness and community progress that nothing be read into the measure by its opponents that is not there or intended. At the same time, of course, it is equally important that a clear understanding be obtained of just what effect may be expected if the proposed amendment should be adopted. The latest objection comes from a group of Pittsburghers who fear that the residents of the city might lose the benefits of their graded tax law if the new plan should become operative. Yet no less an authority on such subjects than former Mayor Magee has emphasized that the municipality of Pittsburgh and its graded tax law 'are preserved under the plan,' and this only brings up that the supreme object of the metropolitan commission has been to achieve its purposes without diminution of 'home rule'. The Pittsburghers who have indorsed the plan have done so much with the assurance that the city's rights of home rule have been guarded as faithfully as those of the boroughs and townships.

What is to be kept in mind is that the plan is to give Pittsburgh the presige of the county population to which it is entitled, without anything of the nature of forcible annexation, and improve the system for community services of common benefit. It would simply turn the government of Allegheny County, which now renders service to the cities and boroughs as well as the townships, into a metropolitan city government with improved powers for rendering community service. Doing away with a lot of duplication of effort, it would be like more economical and more efficient. While it would rest with the people themselves to decide finally as to what the taxation system of the consolidated government shall be, the tax policies indicated would be only those that are now applied by the county. Pittsburgh and Allegheny county would become coterminous or a city-county much as the City of Philadelphia and the County of Philadelphia, but the Pittsburgh metropolitan commission claims that its system is an improvement over any yet devised for such consolidation. Allegheny county by the metropolitan plan would become Greater Pittsburgh. Here is what the amendment resolution itself says on this point:

> 'The General Assembly is hereby authorized to provide for the consolidation of the county, poor districts, cities, boroughs and townships of the County of Allegheny, and the offices thereof, into a consolidated city and county, with the constitutional and legal capacity of a municipal corporation to be known as the City of Pittsburgh, and to provide for a charter for its government.'

As emphasized, if the opponents of the measure have found anything inherently wrong in it they will be rendering a service to the public to show it, but thus far they have not spoken with any degree of certainty in that direction. In the main they have expressed only fears that have not stood analysis. All should bear in mind that this measure represents to a large extent the hope of years for Greater Pittsburgh, and that it would be a most serious wrong to give it a setback based simply upon an unwarranted fear or prejudice. No risk would be run in adoption of the resolution to submit the proposed amendment to the people; for the main debate on it would be still to come, and the voters have the right to decide such questions themselves. It is required that such resolutions pass two sessions of the Legislature before they can be submitted to the electorate. This resolution was adopted by the special session of the Assembly in 1926, and it is now up for its second approval. If this is not given, a work of years for Greater Pittsburgh would be given a serious setback. All striving for the Greater City should be on the alert to see that there is no such reverse unless for reasons better than any presented thus far by the opposition.

Let no light fear or prejudice stand in the way of Greater Pittsburgh. Reflect that while Pittsburgh is in fact the fourth, or fifth city in the country it is kept around tenth place in census rank by the failure to give it a system by which it can get proper credit for population. By all means stand up for the graded tax principle, but at the same time give due consideration to the hopes of years for Greater Pittsburgh."

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA.

AMOUNTS UNDER EACH APPROPRIATION ACT PASSED PRIOR TO THE SESSION OF 1923, AND INCLUDING DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS MADE BY THE SESSION OF 1923 WHICH ARE NOW ESTIMATED TO LAPSE. ITEM 9, CONCURRENT RESOLUTION NO. 12, FEBRUARY 8, 1926.

In the category of "Lapsed Appropriations" only such amounts designated by the Legislature for specific purposes have been considered, such as salaries of officers and employes of the Commonwealth.

For example, in the case of an appointive officer leaving the service of the Commonwealth when a specific amount has been set aside by the Legislature for payment of his salary such amount would be considered a lapse should the appointive power during the interim fail to fill the vacancy. Or if an appropriation to meet contractural obligations has been made that have been completed for an amount less than the appropriation, then presumption of a lapse can be made. In cases of certain unpaid appropriations affecting the Highway and Public Instruction Departments, under certain acts of the Legislature these unpaid appropriations are automatically credited to the ensuing appropriations for the following biennium.

The Attorney General, however, has ruled that the Auditor General shall charge to an appropriation any item of expense occurring during a biennium other than that of the appropriation. As an illustration, an appropriation made in 1917 can have an item charged against it in 1923, if the item in question was for some particular charge during the 1917-1919 biennium. For this reason, we have taken the view that only such specific amounts as noted above might be considered as having lapsed.

Report of The Tax Commission
of the
Commonwealth of Pennsylvania

Harrisburg, January 20, 1927.

To the General Assembly, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, Session of 1927.

The Tax Commission of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania respectfully submits the following report:—

LEGISLATION CREATING THE COMMISSION

At the Legislative Session of 1923, the following joint resolution was duly enacted:

A JOINT RESOLUTION constituting a commission to examine the tax laws of the Commonwealth and of other States and countries, and to prepare and submit bills to carry into effect its recommendations; prescribing the powers and duties of said commission; and making an appropriation.

Section 1. Be it resolved, &c., That a tax commission of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania is hereby constituted, consisting of seven citizens of the Commonwealth, two of whom are to be appointed by the Governor, two by the President pro tempore of the Senate, and three by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to examine the laws of this State and of other States and countries relating to taxation, to investigate systems and methods of taxation, particularly with regard to the best methods of equitably and effectually reaching all property which should be subjected to taxation, and avoiding conflicts and duplication of taxation on the same property, and to prepare the needed legislation to carry such methods into effect in this Commonwealth. The members of said tax commission shall serve without compensation, but their necessary traveling expenses and hotel bills, while actually attending to the business of the tax commission, shall be considered part of the expenses of said tax commission.

Section 2. The said commission ish ereby authorized to sit at Harrisburg or elsewhere within the Commonwealth, to choose a chairman from among its own members, to employ a secretary and counsel, and such other assistants as may be needed, to take testimony, subpoena witnesses, and compel the production of books, documents, and papers, and otherwise have all the powers of a legislative committee.

Section 3. The said tax commission, on or before February first, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-five (1925), shall report the results of its investigation to the General Assembly, together with such proposed legislative measures as it deems advisable to carry its recommendations into effect.

Section 4. The sum of twenty-five thousand dollars ($25,000), or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby appropriated for the defraying of the expense of said tax commission, to be paid, upon the certificate of the chairman of the said tax commission, by warrant of the Auditor General on the State Treasurer in the usual manner.

Approved—The 14th day of June, A. D. 1923, in the sum of fifteen thousand dollars ($15,000). I withhold my approval from the remainder of said appropriation because of insufficient revenue.

Gifford Pinchot.

At the Legislative Session of 1925, the Commission was continued, with an additional appropriation, by the following resolution:

A JOINT RESOLUTION providing for the continuation of the commission appointed in accordance with the provisions of a joint resolution, approved the fourteenth day of June, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-three (Pamphlet Laws, seven hundred fifty), entitled "A joint resolution constituting a commission to examine the tax laws of the Commonwealth and of other States and countries, and to prepare and submit bills to carry into effect its recommendations; prescribing the powers and duties of said commission and making an appropriation," and making an appropriation.

Section 1. Be it enacted, &c., That the commission appointed in accordance with a joint resolution, approved the fourteenth day of June, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-three (Pamphlet Laws, seven hundred fifty), entitled "A joint resolution constituting a commission to examine the tax laws of the Commonwealth and of other States and countries, and to prepare and submit bills to carry into effect its recommendations; prescribing the powers and duties of said commission; and making an appropriation," is hereby continued for a further period of two years.

It shall be the duty of said commission to continue to examine the laws of this State and of other States and countries relating to taxation, to investigate systems and methods of taxation, particularly with regard to the best method of equitably and effectually reaching all property which should be subject to taxation and avoiding conflicts and duplication of taxation on the same property, and to prepare the needed legislation to carry such methods into effect in this Commonwealth, and to make a report of its work to every member of the General Assembly at the session of one thousand nine hundred and twenty-seven.

Section 2. The sum of forty-five thousand dollars ($45,000), or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby specifically appropriated to the commission for the payment of the expenses of the commission; to be paid upon the certificate of the chairman of the said commission by warrant of the Auditor General on the State Treasurer in the usual manner.

Approved—The 13th day of May, A. D. 1925, in the sum of $25,000. I withhold my approval from the remainder of said appropriation because of insufficient State Revenue.

Gifford Pinchot.

ACTION ON PRELIMINARY REPORT OF TAX COMMISSION.

In the report of the Commission submitted to the General Assembly of 1925 there was a full account of the appointment and organization of the Commission, its meetings and public hearings an account of the present tax system of Pennsylvania, with comment upon the existing tax laws and machinery for assessment and collection, also some recommendations for immediate statutory changes in the existing tax system, a consideration of the financial problem of the future, and a suggested plan for a permanent financial policy.

The Commission records with gratification the approval by the Legislature of 1925 of the following recommendations presented by the Commission for immediate action:

(a) The bill eliminating the optional method of taxing bank stock.

(b) The bill including the receipts of hydro-electric and water power companies under the gross receipts tax.

(c) The bill inaugurating reciprocity in the taxation of the personal property of non-resident decedents.

(d) The repeal of the tax on notaries public.

(e) The increase in the gasoline tax from one to two cents per gallon.

(f) The approval of the Constitutional amendment, limiting the debt-carrying capacity of counties to a percentage of realty alone, rather than a percentage of realty and personal property.

The Commission reaffirms the statements and recommendations in the report of 1925, and in this report will not consider in similar detail the subjects which have been already discussed. It is therefore requested that the members of the General Assembly, in considering this report, will also examine the report of 1925, the two reports together embodying all of the recommendations of the Commission.

MEETINGS AND PUBLICATIONS.

Since 1925 the Commission has had many meetings and has given hearings to many interested parties. In addition, the Commission has called upon State officials, representatives of chambers of commerce and other industrial bodies, representatives of various agriculaural organizations and others for needed information.

The Commission has published the following pamphlets:

1. Report of the Pennsylvania Tax Commission to the General Assembly, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 1925.

2. A compilation of the laws relating to State taxation and revenue, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, annotated and indexed, compiled by John H. Fertig, Robert S. Frey, and Burt R. Glidden, of the Legislative Reference Bureau, for the Pennsylvania Tax Commission, 1926.

The Commission now presents:

3. Final report of the Pennsylvania Tax Commission to the General Assembly, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 1927.

The original resolution creating the Commission appropriated $25,000, which sum was reduced by the Governor to $15,000. The second resolution, continuing the Commission, appropriated $45,000, which was reduced by the Governor to $25,000. A financial statement of the Commission covering both appropriations is herewith submitted, as Exhibit A.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

The Commission desires to make general and public acknowledgment of the courtesy, fairness and cooperation which it has received from the citizens of the Commonwealth and of other States who have advised with it. In particular, it acknowledges the helpful cooperation which it received from all the officers of the Commonwealth upon whom it has called for information, including the Governor, Secretary of the Commonwealth, Auditor General, State Treasurer, Secretary of Internal Affairs, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Secretary of Highways, Secretary of Welfare, and Secretary of Agriculture.

The Bureau of Statistics and Information of the Departmentof Internal Affairs has collated and furnished to the Commission the statistics relating to the assessment and collection of local taxes.

The Auditor General and his assistants have responded to many calls for information and data.

John H. Fertig, Assistant Director of the Legislative Reference Bureau, has acted as counsel for the Commission without compensation, and has prepared the drafts for suggested legislation which are herewith recommended.

On account of insufficient appropriation, the Commission found itself unable to complete the work of analyzing the tax burden upon corporations in Pennsylvania in time for this report. To meet this emergency, however, the Acting Secretary of Highways offered the assistance of his entire computing staff, and also the use of his tabulating machines, for which no charge was made to the Commission. As a result, we present a comprehensive analysis of the tax burden of corporations for the year 1924.

Acknowledgment is also due to A. E. Holcomb, Secretary of the National Tax Association, and other officers of this useful association; Oscar Leser, Tax Commissioner of Maryland; Henry F. Long, Commissioner of Corporations and Taxation of Massachusetts; Mark Graves and John J. Merill, Tax Commissioners of New York, and Seth T. Cole and William E. Stevens, Deputy Tax Commissioners; J. Vaughn Gary, counsel of the Tax Commission of Virginia; William B. Belknap, special representative of the Tax Commission of Kentucky; William H. Blodgett, Tax Commissioner of Connecticut; Zenas W. Bliss, Tax Commissioner of Rhode Island; James J. Kelly, Inheritance Tax Commissioner of New Jersey; Arthur K. Pierson, of the Senate of New Jersey; George Woodward and Horace W. Schantz, of the Senate of Pennsylvania; Meyer D. Rothschild, of New York City, Chairman of Committee on Sales Tax; Leonard P. Fox, of the Pennsylvania State Chamber of Commerce; Prof. F. P. Weaver, of Pennsylvania State College; and many others who have cooperated in the preparation of this report.

Special acknowledgment is due to Henry W. Van Pelt, Statistician of the Commission, whose careful and informing statistical studies have materially aided the Commission in its deliberations.

The Commission also desires to record its appreciation of the faithful services of Alton W. Lick, Secretary of the Commission.

When the Commission recommended to the Legislature of 1925 an appropriation of $45,000, it had in mind the allotment of at least $20,000 to a study of the assessment and collection of local taxes, and tax burden upon land. The reduction of the appropriation to $25,000 made it impossible to carry this plan to completion. It is sincerely hoped, however, that in the event that a permanent tax commission is authorized it will be given a sufficient appropriation to enable it to make a study of this important field.

The report of the Commission will be devoted to the consideration of the following topics:

I. The revenue needs of the Commonwealth.

II. Recommendations for immediate revision of the fiscal system of Pennsylvania.

III. A permanent financial policy for the future.

CHAPTER I.
THE REVENUE NEEDS OF THE COMMONWEALTH.

State and local income and expenditure necessarily must be considered together. There is no general rule in the United States which prescribes what functions should be assumed by the State or what functions assumed by local government. In general, all of the States of the Union are engaged in highway improvement, in the maintenance of public schools, and in the care of dependents and defectives. In some States a larger portion of the resulting tax burden may be borne by the State, while in others it may be borne by local government. In the majority of the States the major sources of income for the State are taxes on inheritances and business and sometimes a general property tax, while everywhere the major source of income for local government is realty. In most States, however, there is also a tax on land for State purposes, although since 1866 Pennsylvania has been exempt from this form of taxation for State purposes.

During the last twelve years, covering the period of the World War and reconstruction, there has been a tremendous increase in the cost of State and local government, and also a very great increase in the bonded indebtedness of State and local government, and also a very great increase in the bonded indebtedness of State and local governments. Most of the States of the Union show this tendency, and Pennsylvania is no exception.

Insofar as this increase has been due to the increased cost of living, or the lower purchasing power of the dollar, it must be recognized that it is based upon economic facts, which cannot be ignored, and which it is futile to criticize. Insofar as this increase in the cost of State and local government has been due to the desire of the people to have the existing functions of government better performed, we must recognize again that it is based upon a sound economic principle. There are a few who will protest against the improvement in the highway system, or in the standards of public education, which has been common to most of the States during this period.

Insofar, however, as this increase in the cost of State and local government is due to an expansion of program, it is a serious question whether the time has not come in which a temporary halt should be called upon advance in this direction. No new function can be assumed by the State or local government unless new revenue is provided to meet it. Any permanent decrease in the tax burden is impossible so long as we are working with an expanding program. No new functions should, therefore, be assumed unless there is a definite provision for additional revenue.

Applying these principles to our own Commonwealth, we find that in the period from 1916 to 1922, the State authorized a highway program of immense value to the citizens of the Commonwealth, and at the same time reorganized the public school system along lines which have since been demonstrated to be sound. This resulted in a great increase in the appropriation liability of the State, and this increase was much more rapid than the increase in revenue. By 1923, the financial situation of the Commonwealth had become so critical that the various local districts were compelled to wait for months, and even years, before they could receive what the State had promised to them, in consideration of which they had themselves inaugurated programs of local development and improvement. It was because of this urgent situation that the Pennsylvania Tax Commission was created. Since then, however, the increase in income has gradually overtaken the increase in expenditure, and at the present time the State is able to meet all its obligations, and at the same time maintain a surplus in its treasury. But the full financial effect of the expanded program authorized in the earlier period has not yet been reached, as will appear from the letters from the Secretary of Highways, the Superintendent of Public Instruction, and the Secretary of Welfare calling attention to the needs of these departments under existing legislation in the next ten-year period. When the pressure of these needs is felt, additional sources of revenue will probably be required, and in summarizing our conclusions in this report, we have had in mind not so much the immediate as the more distant future, when the need will become vital to the people of the Commonwealth.

The discussion in this chapter of the report will be devoted to the following:

1. Relative tax burdens of Pennsylvania and other States.
2. Income and expenditures of the Commonwealth under existing law.
3. The future needs of the State.

REVENUE NEEDS OF THE COMMONWEALTH RELATIVE TAX BURDENS OF PENNSYLVANIA AND OTHER STATES.

In the Report of 1925, the Commission presented figures based upon United States Census data, showing the burden of taxes in Pennsylvania and a group of other States for the year 1922. More recently, the National Industrial Conference Board has issued a report[1] giving the amounts of Federal, State and local taxes levied in each State in 1924, together with certain comparisons upon a per-capita basis and an income basis. Those figures are elaborated in Tables 1 and 5 of Exhibit C of this Report, and show the following:

1. The actual amountof Federal, State and local taxes levied in 1924, by States.

2. For Pennsylvania and thirteen other States, and for the United States, a comparison of Federal, State and local taxes—

(a) On a per-capita basis.

(b) As a percentage of total individual incomes within the State.[2]

(c) Per thousand dollars of estimated wealth. (See page 75).

3. Deviation of taxes in Pennsylvania and the same thirteen States from the average for the United States, showing the same threefold comparison as above.

4. The same data shown as index numbers, with the average for the United States taken as 100 per cent (page 77).

5. Rank of Pennsylvania and specified States among the 48 States with respect to tax burden, measured as above (page 78).

On the following page, the figures in Table 2 for State and local tax burdens are shown in graphic form for ready comparison. From this chart and from the tables cited above, it is evident that the tax burden in Pennsylvania for State and local purposes is not so heavy as the average for the Union, nor is it so heavy as is the tax burden of neighboring States, whose industrial conditions are fairly comparable to our own.

On the per-capita basis, Pennsylvania in 1924 paid $38.06 for State and local taxes, as compared with $61.42 in New York State, $62.87 in New Jersey, $57.33 in Massachusetts, and $46.87 in Ohio. On the income basis, Pennsylvania paid 5.83 per cent for State and local taxes, as compared with 7.01 per cent in New York State, 9.08 per cent in New Jersey, 7.37 per cent in Massachusetts, and 7.79 per cent in Ohio. On the wealth basis the relative standing of Pennsylvania is much the same as above.

It is noteworthy, however that the contribution of Pennsylvania to Federal taxes, on both the per-capita and the income basis, is greater than the average for the country. This condition results in giving to Pennsylvania a total per-capita average for the entire tax burden slightly in excess of the average for the country, and a total tax burden on the income basis slightly under the average for the country. Among the 48 States of the Union, Pennsylvania, in its total tax burden, ranks sixteenth on the per-capita basis, thirty-sixth on the percentage-of-income basis, and twenty-eighth on the wealth basis.

These tables, therefore, indicate that there is no justification for the assertion that the average tax burden in Pennsylvania is heavier than in the other States, nor do they justify any assertion that government in Pennsylvania has been wastefully administered.

The above conclusions, however, are based upon general averages only, and must not be understood to apply to individual cases or particular groups within the State, to which there will be reference later.

INCOME AND EXPENDITURES OF THE COMMONWEALTH UNDER EXISTING LAW.

We submit a table showing the income of the Commonwealth for the general fund and the special funds from 1915 to the present time, also the expenditures for a similar period. These tables are amplified in the statistical data presented in Exhibit D, page 79. A consideration of these figures justifies the conclusion that with the increasing effectiveness in the collection of taxes, together with the normal increase in the growth of business, and the State's increasing population and wealth, there will be sufficient revenue provided, at least for the next biennium, to meet the present government program. It is to be noted that the revenue for the biennium 1923-1925 was increased by the additional one-cent tax on gasoline, and the emergency profits tax, whereas in the next biennium the State's share of the income from the gasoline tax has been appropriated to the motor fund, while the emergency profits tax inspired by limitation of the act creating it. In general, however, unless there is a marked expansion of the program of the State, we believe that present revenues will be sufficient for the next biennium.

[2] The computation oft he ratio of taxes to income is subject to the uncertainties which attach to data with reference to income, concerning which there are no statistics of absolute accuracy, although careful studies have been made in this connection.

RECEIPTS OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA: 1915-26.

Fiscal Year	General fund	Special funds	Total receipts, all funds
1915	$31,840,578	$150,150	$31,990,728
1916	36,199,784	463,255	36,663,039
1917	31,056,412	644,077	31,700,489
1918	43,165,981	999,388	44,165,369
1919	44,622,164	19,893,146	64,515,310
1920	47,249,984	26,621,310	73,871,294
1922	49,367,717	53,153,627	102,521,344
1923	61,553,105	32,895,018	94,448,123
1924	66,718,875	36,405,074	103,123,949
1925	73,985,961	67,005,716	140,991,677
1926	71,302,347	87,590,072	158,892,419

In considering the above figures, it should be borne in mind that the general fund, out of which the ordinary legislative appropriations, are made, consists almost exclusively of what may be termed "revenue receipts," whereas the special funds are made up partly of revenue receipts and partly of non-revenue receipts. Thus, in the fiscal year 1926, the sale of highway bonds accounted for receipts of $20,000,000 in the special State bond road fund, so that total receipts in the special funds, exclusive of the issuance of debt obligations, amounted to $138,892,419 instead of the total given in the table.

THE FUTURE NEEDS OF THE STATE.

From the point of view of expenditure, the Highway, Public Instruction, and Welfare Departments are the major departments of the State.

1. Highways.

Out of a total of 12,000 miles of road on the highway system of the State, by the end of 1926 about 8,000 miles are either constructed, or else authorized for construction, the funds for this purpose having been provided from the motor fund and bonds.

The construction of the balance, or 4,000 miles, at an average cost of $50,000 per mile, will require $200,000,000. It is difficult to anticipate how this additional mileage can be financed in the near future, except by creating additional bonded debt. The people of this Commonwealth have approved the principle of borrowing money for highway construction, and bonds aggregating $100,000,000 have been already authorized, issued, and the proceeds, in large measure, expended. We recommend to the Legislature the favorable consideration of the joint resolution, approved at the Session of 1925, proposing an amendment to the Constitution authorizing the State to issue $50,000,000 of bonds additional for highway purposes. The proceeds of this loan, if authorized, together with the income from the gasoline tax and motor licenses, will go a long distance toward completing the State highway system.

We commend the policy of the State, which was expressed in the legislation of 1925, whereby the entire income from motor liceses and the State's share of the gasoline tax are devoted to highway purposes, including interest and sinking fund on the highway bonds, in order that the entire cost of the highway system, including maintenance, may be met by the users of the roads.

We recommend that the present gasoline tax of two cents per gallon should be made permanent, as the act imposing the second cent will expire June 30, 1927. It may even be necessary to increase the gasoline tax. We believe that this tax, which is now accepted in forty-four States of the Union, is equitable, and readily and economically collected, and we append a table showing the existing rates in all the States, Exhibit, page 82. The tax will become even more effective when all the neighboring States adopt this form of taxation. We believe, however, that in no very long time a tax on gasoline will become a permanent part of the fiscal policy of every State, and we commend the policy of using the proceeds for highway purposes alone.

Referring to the letter of William H. Connell, Acting Secretary of Highways, hereto appended, Exhibit B, page 62, it will be noted that when the State highway system is complete it will require an expenditure of some $65,000,000 to $80,000,000 per year for maintenance, repairs, resurfacing, general administration, and so forth. These figures do not include interest and sinking fund charges on a bonded indebtedness of $300,000,000 for highway purposes, which will probably be outstanding ten years hence. The inclusion of these charges brings total State highway expenditures, as estimated by Mr. Connell, to $100,000,000 per year, or a total of $200,000,000 for the biennium 1937-39.[1] When the full effect of this charge has been reached, additional revenue will be needed, and this burden logically should be borne by the users of the roads.

2. Public Schools.

Attention is directed to the letter of Francis B. Haas, Superintendent of Public Instruction, hereto appended, Exhibit B, page 66, which indicates the probable increase in outlay under existing legislation for the next decennial period. In addition to the expenditures made necessary by existing laws, certain capital outlay, particularly in the improvement of the plants of the normal schools, is urgently required. During the past ten years these public institutions have not been maintained in accordance with their own importance and the dignity and wealth of the State. If Pennsylvania is to advance its educational standards, serious attention should be given to this problem. Moreover, the primary duty of the State is to the institutions which it maintains. Subsidies to private institutions should only be made after there has been an adequate provision for the public institutions.

By the school legislation of 1921, the Legislature provided that in school districts of the first class 25 per cent of the basic salary of each teacher should be paid by the State; in school districts of the second and third classes, 35 per cent; and in school districts of the fourth class, 50 per cent. The Legislature of 1923, in order to provided better educational opportunities in the less wealthy school districts , established two preferential groups of school districts according to the estimated true value of realty per teacher. Those districts in which the estimated true value of realty is less than $50,000 per teacher hence receive 75 per cent of the basic salary of each teacher from the State, and those districts which have an estimated true value of realty per teacher in excess of $50,000 and not more than $100,000 receive 60 per cent of the basic salary from the State. As a result, there has been a tendency of school districts to move into these preferential groups, sometimes by reporting their assessed value as the estimated true valuation, with the result of an increase in the State appropriation. This tendency is clearly apparent from the figures in the following table.

CLASSIFICATION OF SCHOOL DISTRICTS FOR APPROPRIATION PURPOSES.

[Number of districts in each percentage group]

Biennium	Third class districts			Fourth class districts
	35 per cent group	60 per cent group	75 per cent group	50 per cent group	60 per cent group	75 per cent group
1923-25	200	20	0	1,190	892	263
1925-27	183	35	1	1,192	859	265
1927-29[1]	180	36	2	1,136	877	319

[1] Preliminary figures.

[1] The estimate may be reduced somewhat through completion of part of the State Highway System on a fifty-fifty basis, with counties and townships contributing 50 per cent. of the construction cost. (See further discussion on page 66.)

The Act of 1923 provided that the State Council of Education should act as a final authority in revising the basis of the assessment, with a view to determining which districts are justly entitled to this preferential treatment. But the State Council is not equipped for the discharge of this important function. It may be expected that in time practically all of the fourth-class and many of the third-class school districts will enter either the sixty or the seventy-five per cent group, unless some adequate means of meeting the situation are devised. Insofar as this tendency is based upon the genuine need of the poorer districts, the Commission is in full harmony with it; but insofar as it is based upon the desire to obtain the maximum grant from the State, without regard to the real financial condition of the district, the Commission feel that it should be checked; and that, if not checked, it will result in a serious increase in the burden on the State of the public school system.

3. Welfare.

Attention is directed to the letter of Dr. Ellen C. Potter, Secretary of Welfare, Exhibit B, page 70. It will be noted from this letter that there is bound to be a marked increase in the appropriation for welfare purposes, particularly if the State is to assume its shae of the burden with reference to the Mothers' Assistance Fund, and also to maintain adequate plants for the insane and feeble-minded. The great need of this department would seem to be the provision of a regular fund for capital outlay, until the plant of the State for the care of criminals, as well as the insane and feeble-minded, becomes adequate.

To meet this situation the Commission has reported a recommendation which is stated on page 26.

4. Bond Issues.

Special attention is directed to the several resolutions which have been adopted at recent sessions of the Legislature contemplating the increase in the bonded indebtedness of the State. The following resolutions were passed at the Legislative Sessions of 1923 and 1925, and will be submitted to the vote of the people at the general election in 1928:

1. Buildings at Pennsylvania State College	$8,000,000
2. For acquiring land for forest purposes	25,000,000
3. For acquiring and erecting buildings and equipping the same for the use of the Pennsylvania National Guard	5,000,000
Total	38,000,000

The following resolutions were passed at the Session of 1925 and will be submitted again to the Session of 1927:

1. Soldiers and sailors bonus	$35,000,000
2. Highway purposes (additional)	50,000,000
3. Buildings for State welfare institutions	50,000,000
4. For construction of State buildings, memorial bridge, etc.	100,000,000
Total	235,000,000

When it is remembered that highway bonds to a total of $100,000,000 have already been authorized, the proposed total, if all of these resolutions should become effective, of $373,000,000, requiring a charge for interest and sinking funds of approximately $25,000,000 per year, becomes absolutely staggering.

The Commission believes that Pennsylvania can afford to inaugurate a pay-as-you-go system on everything except highways. In order to put this plan in operation, it will be necessary to provide a permanent fund for capital outlay, and in another section of the report a recommendation is made along this line (see page 26). We are opposed to the increase of the State debt for any purpose other than the completion of the highway sytem. Special loans for particular purposes not only cause a large increase in the annual expenditures for debt-carrying charges, but in addition result in a great inflation of the payroll of administrative departments as a necessary incident. When there is an extroordinary fund to be expended, there is bound to be an extraordinary increase in employees in order to provide for the supervision of the expenditure; and every employee thus placed on the payroll for an emergency becomes an agitator for a permanent position as soon as the extraordinary fund has been expended. Sound economic thinking requires that each generation should bear its own burden without loading the generations yet to come.

We urge the General Assembly to give serious attention to the principles above stated in considering all loan bills; but in the event that the popular vote should approve any future loans, we then recommend to the Legislature that in the enabling legislation careful attention be given to limiting the expenditure in any one year and to safeguarding administrative expenses.

CHAPTER II

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR IMMEDIATE REVISION OF THE FISCAL SYSTEM OF PENNSYLVANIA

In this chapter, the Commission will consider its recommendations for immediate legislation, all of which are embodied in bills explained in Chapter IV, pages 54 to 58, and herewith submitted to the Legislature.

The following subjects will be considered:

1. Permanent State Tax Commission.
2. Assessment and collection of local taxes.
3. Inheritance taxes.
4. Business taxes.
5. Personal property tax for county purposes.
6. Taxation of private bankers and brokers.
7. Taxes on realty.
8. Local bond issues and sinking funds.
9. Special funds.
10. Motor license fees.
11. Bonus on corporation charters.
12. Assessment of forest lands and lands containing metals, minerals, etc.
13. Proposed amendment of capital stock tax law.
14. Insurance.

1. Permanent State Tax Commission.

The Commission recommends the establishment of an administrative commission, to be known as the State Tax Commission, composed of three members, specially equipped for this service, to be appointed by the Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one to serve for two years, one for four years, one for six years, their successors to serve for terms of six years.

We have been led to the conclusion that such a commission should be created because of the success of such administrative commissions in the other States of the Union. Reference is made to the Report of the Commission in 1925, pages 62 and 63, for the list of States in which there is a permanent administrative tax commission, entrusted with definite authority in connection with the fiscal system of the State. In many States these administrative officials hold office through successive administrations, thereby giving continuity and stability to policy and rulings.

The Commission is a unit in recognizing the efficient work of the Auditor General and his assistants and feels that the Legislature might appropriately recognize this work with larger appropriations and salaries, so as to retain trained and experienced men for the public service. The original duties of this office, however, as the title indicates, relate to the important work of auditing public bills, and while the Legislature has from time to time imposed other duties upon the Auditor General, it may be seriously considered whether a proper development of the Executive branch of the government would not in time require that the tax-collecting and the auditing functions be separated.

We recommend that the State Tax Commission should be intrusted with the assessment and collection of all inheritance taxes, assessment and collection of mercantile licenses, and the supervision of the four-mills personal property tax for county purposes, and also with the duty of determining the true value of realty per teacher, in accordance with which school districts fall within the preferential groups created by the legislation of 1923.

It may be of value to the State to confer additional powers on the State Tax Commission, but this action ought to be delayed until the commission has been organized and has begun to function.

The universal testimony of experts in taxation is that centralized collection of taxes results in larger collections and administrative economy. At the present time in Pennsylvania the inheritance tax and mercantile licenses are locally assessed and collected. In the case of inheritance taxes the Commonwealth has no jurisdiction over the appraisers of the estate, who are locally appointed, nor has the Commonwealth an appeal in case the appraisement is unfair to the State. The experience of all of the large industrial States indicates that central administration is essential to efficiency and economy.

From Hon. Edward Martin, Auditor General of Pennsylvania, the Commission has obtained the following figures (see Exhibit F, page 83, for further details):

In the year ending May 31, 1926, the Corporation Bureau of his office collected $42,496,000.00, at a total expense of $302,919.86, or a cost of seven-tenths of one per cent.

The net amount of mercantile and other licenses collected by the county treasurers was $3,933,634.09, of which the total cost of collection was $327,270.09, or more than eight per cent.

The total gross inheritance taxes collected for the year 1925 were $12,934,209.07, of which the total cost of collection was $774,729.01, or about six per cent.

The total amount of the gasoline tax collected in 1925 was $10,574,413.70, of which the cost of collection was $71,354.51, or less than seven-tenths of one per cent.

The first and fourth of the above taxes are centrally collected, at a cost of approximately seven-tenths of one per cent. The second and third of the above taxes are locally collected, at a cost of seven per cent. In other words, the cost of local collection is ten times the cost of central collection, or to state it concretely, assuming central collection at the same rate of cost, there would be saved to the people of Pennsylvania over $1,000,000 per year.

We believe that the elimination of administrative waste is desired by all, and we recommend the centralized assessment and collection of State taxes to this end.

Moreover, the adoption of the system proposed would eliminate the practice whereby registers of wills and county treasurers receive, in addition to their local salaries, fees for the collection of State taxes, leading to a total remuneration so excessive as to constitute a real public abuse.

The need for a permanent tax commission is further illustrated by the absence under existing conditions of any permanent agency whose duty and responsibility it is to advise the Legislature and the Governor, after mature study, with regard to the best and most equitable means of providing necessary revenues for the Commonwealth. Changing conditions will always necessitate changes from time to time in any tax system, however well it may originally have been devised. Only through constant attention on the part of such a group of practical tax experts as is here proposed can the fiscal machinery of the State be kept in the smoothest possible running order. The educative value of this work in collecting statistics relating to taxation and in informing the body of citizens of financial tendencies which should be considered in planning a budget, is also of great value.

There is an additional advantage in a permanent administrative tax commission, in that it will enable the State to be represented in conferences with the commissions of other States, which, like our own, are endeavoring to increase efficiency in administration, eliminate waste, and promote uniformity in taxing methods.

To this end, we recommend the adoption of Bill No. 1, Chapter IV, page 54.

2. Assessment and Collection of Local Taxes.

No subject considered by the Commission has aroused more universal interest than the assessment and collection of local taxes. In the administration of Governor Sproul, a commission was appointed on this subject, whose findings were submitted to the Legislature in 1921, 1923 and 1925. As that commission has expired, we have, after careful consideration, adopted some of its conclusions as our own, and present its recommendations in modified form.

We have also had the advantage of the study of F. P. Weaver, Professor of Agricultural Economics at the Pennsylvania State College, who has made an inquiry into the assessment and collection of taxes on farm property at the request of the Department of Agriculture. In this inquiry, six counties, viz., Lebanon, Lancaster, Westmoreland, Crawford, Wyoming and Warren, were especially studied in order to determine the relationship which recent sales of realty bore to the assessed valuation of the properties. Also, Professor Weaver has estimated the relative proportion of the burden of taxation upon farm land as compared with business. The results of his work have been published by the Department of Agriculture, but we have appended to our report certain statistical data, which he has collected, in order to illustrate the nature of the problem (see Exhibit G, page 87). His study shows the striking lack of uniformity in the assessment of realty not only as between the counties, but also as between taxing districts in the same county and sometimes realty in the same taxing district. It also shows that the tax burden upon agriculture for local purposes is very great, and that it has increased materially in recent years largely because of higher standards in highway work and the public schools.

The evils in the present system of assessment and collection of local taxes are as follows:

(a) Wide variations in the ratio of assessment to real value, sometimes within the same taxing district.

(b) Consequent injustice in the burden of county taxes, which are based on the local assessments.

(c) Multiplicity of tax collecters, most of whom are paid by the commission system, whose income is increased with the increase in local taxes out of proportion to the value of their service.

(d) Serious inconvenience to the taxpayer, caused by the multiplicity of tax bills and tax collectors and different times and places of payment.

This system has developed in Pennsylvania in a haphazard fashion, without serious attention being given either to its operation or cost until this past decade. Any change has been opposed on the ground that to make the county the unit for assessment and collection would interfere with local self-government. Without challenging this sentiment, which to a degree is entirely commendable, the Commission feels that those who defend the existing system are responsible for fastening upon the taxpayer a heavy burden of unnecessary costs by method of assessment and collection which are uneconomic and inequitable. The example of other States of the Union demonstrates that the county can be made the unit for assessment and collection with economy and without interfering with local self-government. To meet this condition, the Commission has reported a bill providing for centralized county assessment of realty, by a board of county assessors, appointed by the county commissioners; and a bill providing for the centralized collection of taxes (see Bills No. 2a and 2b, Chapter IV, page 54). Neither of these bills in any way with control of the budget, which is essential to local self-government.

As illustrating the need for these measures, the Commission refers to the statistics complied by the Bureau of Statistics and Information of the Department of Internal Affairs, which gives the cost of the assessment and collection of taxes for every taxing district of the State. While it has been impossible for us to reprint these statistics in full, special reference is made to the extracts given in Exhibit H, pages 90 to 119.

3 Inheritance Taxes.

The taxation of inheritances, either in the form of estate taxes, or transfer taxes, has become a part of the fiscal system of every State in the Union, except Florida, Nevada, Alabama and the District of Columbia. Pennsylvania, with its collateral inheritance tax dating back to 1826, was the pioneer in this form of taxation, and for many years the collateral inheritance tax (which until 1921 was at the rate of five per cent) has been one of the approved taxes of the Commonwealth.

Within recent years, however, the imposition of a tax on direct inheritances at the rate of two per cent, the raising of the rate on collaterals to ten per cent, the enactment of a Federal estate tax, and the multiplicity of State taxes on the transfer of the intangible personal property of non-resident decedents (stocks and bonds) have so over-burdened inheritances as to exasperate public sentiment with this form of taxation.

The Commission believes in the theory of inheritance taxation, but it also believes that present methods must be altered, so as to rid the system of the injustices and inequities which have caused the flight of capital to non-taxing jurisdictions, the establishment of personal trusts to avoid inheritance taxation, and the employment of methods of evasion which are only tolerated by a public sentiment which is inherently honest, because of the abuses which have developed.

We therefore conclude as follows:

(a) We re-affirm the traditional stand of Pennsylvania that the Federal Government should withdraw from the field of estate taxation, and we note with gratification the resolution of the Legislature of 1925 expressing this point of view which was adopted unanimously in both Houses, and transmitted to the Senators and members of Congress from this State. We believe that the Federal Government does not need the estate tax as a source of income, that the States does need it, that it has been so long a portion of the fiscal machinery of the States that it ought not now to be either duplicated or diverted by the Federal Government.

In 1926 the State of Florida instituted legal proceedings in the United States Supreme Court for the purpose of testing the constitutionality of the Federal Estate Tax of 1926. These proceedings have just been dismissed by the Supreme Court. While the Commission has had no opportunity to examine the opinion of the Supreme Court, it concludes from this action that it is necessary to educate public opinion on the subject with a view to securing a repeal of the Federal estate tax by Congress.

It therefore recommends to the General Assembly of Pennsylvania the adoption of a resolution similar in form and content to that which was adopted in 1925, a copy of which is herewith appended in Chapter IV, page 57.

(b) We report with great satisfaction the response of the other States of the Union to the recommendation of the Pennsylvania Tax Commission in favor of the abolition of the taxation of the intangible personal property of non-resident decedents through reciprocity. Reciprocity originated in this State with the Act of Assembly approved by the Governor, May 14, 1925, which exempted from this form of taxation the personal property of non-resident decedents of those States, which reciprocally would waive the tax upon the personal property of the estates of Pennsylvanias. New York and Connecticut followed with legislation which became effective July 1, 1925, and Massachusetts with legislation which became effective December 1, 1925. In 1926, New Jersey repealed absolutely its tax on the intangible personal property of non-resident decedents, and then the reciprocity States united in uniform regulations pertaining to waivers and transfers, which will greatly facilitate the transfer of intangibles of non-resident decedents and lessen the costs of administration. At the present time, reciprocity is effective between Pennsylvania, New York, Connecticut and Massachusetts, which have adopted the reciprocal provision; and Florida, Nevada, Alabama, and the District of Columbia, which have no inheritance taxes; and Georgia, Vermont, Rhode Island, Tennessee, and New Jersey, which do not tax the intangibles of a non-resident decedent.

It is hoped that the other States will adopt reciprocity at the current sessions of their Legislatures, and if the time comes when all States will accept this principle, then the multiple taxation of the intangibles of a non-resident decedent will be absolutely eliminated by the cooperative action of the States.

In order to advance the cause of reciprocity, we report an inheritance tax bill containing the following provisions (see Chapter IV, Bill No. 5a, page 55):

(1) A clause limiting reciprocity to intangible personal property, to meet the effect of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Frick's Estate, which allows the taxation of tangible personal property only by the State where the property is located.

(2) The Commission also recommends that the two classes which exist at the present time with reference to inheritance taxation should be enlarged to three. The new classification suggested is as follows:

Direct inheritances, two per cent; inheritances passing from brother to sister or vice versa, and legacies to charity, five per cent; all others, ten per cent.

It is believed that this change in classification will meet one of the most serious criticisms of our present inheritance tax system.

(3) The Commission recommends that a deduction of $5,000 be allowed from all estates, the credit to be given either by the will, or else equally among all legacies. This will obviate the necessity of assessing any tax against small estates, in which the cost of assessment and collection is greater than the amount of income received from the tax. Although the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, in Cope's Estate, 191 Pa. 1, decided that an exemption of estate of a certain size from the operation of an inheritance tax would be unconstitutional, nevertheless since that time the practice of allowing a uniform deduction applicable to all estates has become so generally recognized that we believe we have surmounted the difficulty presented by this decision. (See Chapter IV, Bill No. 5a, page 55.)

The Commission has also reported a bill amending the Fiduciaries Act with a clause abolishing the necessity for the probate of wills of non-residents in Pennsylvania, in order to secure the transfer of securities over which the State may have taxing jurisdiction.

Pending the repeal of the Federal Estate Tax of 1926, in order to take advantage of the provision which allows a deduction up to eighty per cent of the amount of State taxes actually imposed and paid, we have also reported a bill increasing the inheritance tax in Pennsylvania to eighty per cent of the amount of the Federal tax (see Chapter IV, Bill No. 5b, page 55.) Similar legislation was passed in 1925 at a time when the Federal law permitted a deduction of twenty-five per cent for State taxes; and while there is doubt as to its constitutionality in Pennsylvania, sound finance would suggest that an effort at least be made to secure for the State Treasury as much as is possible from this source.

We furthermore recommend that the proceeds of all inheritance taxes should be segregated as a constant fund for capital improvements by the State. The returns from inheritance taxes are comparatively stable, and even with the reductions indicated above, it is believed that they will amount to approximately $12,000,000 a year. We believe that the State needs a constant fund for capital outlay. We are opposed to the policy of borrowing money for capital needs except for highway construction. The great increase in the funded debt of State and local government throughout the United States at the present time, to about $1,400,000,000 per year, and involving, as it does, approximately $100,000,000 of additional taxation each year in order to meet the interest and sinking fund, is one of the serious fiscal evils of the day.

We believe that the proper method of meeting this situation is to set aside the income from this tax and to adopt a permanent fiscal policy of financing capital improvements from this tax. The advantages to the State are manifold. It would enable the administrative officials to plan each year for a definite program of capital outlay, with the certainty that the funds would be provided from taxation. It would be more economical in that it would not only save the expense of interest and sinking fund on bonded indebtedness, but it would also save the great inflation of the payroll of administrative departments, which is incident to every bond issue.

We believe that Pennsylvania can afford to inaugurate a pay-as-you-go system on everything except highways, and in order to do so it must provide a fund for capital outlay, which shall be permanent in its nature. As the tax on inheritances consists in some measure of withdrawals from the capital of an estate, it would seem peculiarly appropriate that the funds thus withdrawn should be added to the capital of the State and not dissipated in current expenditures.

If this plan meets with Legislative approval, we would suggest that the fund be apropriated by the Legislature at each session on some basis of division which will recognize the needs of the normal schools, the various welfare institutions, additions to State forests, such educational institutions as are directly under State control, armories and the other departments on the program of the State, until an adequate povision has been made for each.

It may not be possible to segregate the entire income from inheritance taxes for this purpose during the biennium 1927-29. We would suggest, however, that the Executive and the Legislature start the policy by segregating at least one-half of the income from inheritance taxes for capital outlay and that the proportion be increased by succeeding Legislatures until the entire receipts from inheritance taxation can be used for this purpose.

4. Business Taxes.

In the Report of 1925, the Commission considered under this head:

1. Capital stock tax.
2. Corporate loans tax.
3. Corporation bonus on charters.
4. Gross receipts tax.
5. Insurance premiums tax.
6. Bank stock tax.
7. Title and trust company tax.
8. Private banks gross receipts tax.
9. Notary public gross receipts tax.
10. Building and loan association matured stock-tax.
11. Net earnings or income tax.
12. Mercantile license tax.
13. Stock transfer tax.
14. Anthracite coal tax.
15. Emergency profits tax.

These fifteen taxes, two of which, the emergency profits tax. and the notary public gross receipts tax, are no longer in force, represent the methods devised in this Commonwealth for the taxation of business. In the same report, pages 35 to 41, attention was directed to the inequities in the present fiscal system, which are bound to result from a system of special taxes in which a tax is imposed on the capital stock of some corporations and not on that of others, on the sales of certain businesses, and not on those of others, on incorporated business organizations and not on incorporated business of the same nature. The general result has been adequate revenue, but a growing feeling that the tax burden has been inequitably imposed.

The Commission was instructed by the Legislature to pay particular attention to "the best methods of equitably and effectually reaching all properties which should be subjected to taxation and avoiding conflicts and duplications of taxation on the same property." To this end, the Commission has had an analysis prepared of the reports of the business corporations for the year 1924, as filed with the Auditor General of the Commonwealth, in order to determine the amount of State, local and Federal taxes, paid by the different classes of corporations in proportion to both capital and net income.

The results of this study are appended to this report as Exhibit J, page 120, while the salient comparisons for some of the principal classes of business are shown in graphic form in the accompanying chart.

In summary, moreover, the following tables are presented with particular reference to the manufacturing, publishing, and laundering corporations, which are exempt from the capital stock tax, upon so much of their capital as is actually employed in manfacturing or laundering. As these exempt corporations paid the emergency profits tax of one-half of one per cent in 1924,the figures for that year probably indicate a higher percentage of State and local taxes than for an ordinary year.

It has been a traditional Pennsylvania policy that the manufacturing corporations of the Commonwealth should be exempt from the capital stock tax upon so much of their capital as is employed in manufacturing. By judicial decision (see Commonwealth v. Lippincott, 156 Pa. 513, and Commonwealth v. Curtis Publishing Co., 237 Pa. 323), the publication of newspapers and periodicals has been adjudged to be a manufacturing business; corporations engaged therein are therefore similarly exempt. By a special act of the Legislature, the same exemption has been extended to incorporated laundry companies.

The chief reason which has been advanced in support of this policy is that the exemption from this tax encourages the location of new industrial enterprises in Pennsylvania, and deters existing corporate industries from removing to other States which offer tax exemptions, or other advantages not available in Pennsylvania. And, it is alleged, industries thus established and retained within the State create enlarged opportunities for the employment of its citizens, thereby raising the level of wages; create increased business for farmers, merchants, builders, professional men, the railways, banks, and, it is claimed, for practically all of the activities in which the citizens are engaged. It is argued that the benefits which the community thus derives justify the exemption; and that the increased revenus which the State and local governments derive from the increased volume of business, and from the enhancement in the value of the property, more than offsets any lessening in the aggregate proceeds of the capital stock tax which the exemptions may cause. This argument has been persuasive with the Legislature, for, although proposals for the repeal of the exemption have been made frequently, none of the bills introduced for that purpose has received favorable consideration.

Insofar as this reasoning applies to industries which are competitive with those of other States, and those which, from the nature of their business, are not under the necessity of having their plants in this State, it has greater force than with respect to those kinds of industry which cannot be elsewhere located, and which are subject only to local competition, where the reasons for exemption are much less valid, if they have any merit at all. But it would be impossible to differentiate between these various classes in the application of a captial stock tax.

Prolonged study has been given to this subject, and the recommendation of the Commission with reference thereto will be found in the next chapter, which relates to the future fiscal policy of the State (see pages 47 to 51).

5. Four-Mills Personal Property Tax for County Purposes.

The further study of the Commission leads it to reaffirm its conclusion that this tax, in its incidence, administration and collection, is one of the most unsatisfactory taxes in the entire fiscal machinery of the State. It is quite clear that there is a large amount of personal property properly taxable, which is escaping taxation, and that in many cases, except with reference to mortgages, judgments, and trust estates, the administration of the tax is more or less of a dead letter. This fact has long been recognized by economists and tax experts and was admitted in reports of tax investigations in various States upwards of half a century ago. Many of the States have abandoned this form of tax. Others have tried various means to effect a more complete assessment, but the testimony is general to the effect that only a fraction of the property liable to the tax is assessed and that the form of the tax is so inequitable that public sentiment indulges evasion. The Commission feels that the Act should be amended to exempt bank deposits from inclusion under this tax, and that the supervision of the assessment and collection of this tax be given to the State Tax Commission.

Wherever centralized administration of such taxes has been tried, it has proven more efficient than local collection, but the success has been far from complete. If, after a fair trial under centralized supervision, a greater revenue cannot be secured for the counties for this purpose, in order to relieve the burden upon realty, then doubtless some other form of taxation must be devised.

With reference to the taxation of mortgages, the Commission renews its recommendations that as soon as the amendment to the Constitution can be adopted, which will eliminate personal property from consideration as a portion of the base of the borrowing capacity of local government, the tax on mortgages should be repealed in favor of a morgage registration tax of five mills on the face amount for county purposes. This tax has met with success in New York State, and has been tried successfully in other States, where it is reported as one of the most economical taxes in collection that can be devised. It has a higher degree of equity than the present four-mills tax on mortgages, for the latter is paid by residents of the Commonwealth only; whereas a mortgage registration tax is collected when the mortgage is recorded upon all mortgages. A bill for this purpose is also reported, although it should not be passed until the Session of 1929, and only then if the amendment relating to the borrowing capacity of cities and counties, which was approved at the Session of 1925, shall be approved at the Session of 1927, and then ratified by the people. (See Chapter IV, Bill No. 21, page 58.)

6. Taxation of Private Bankers and Brokers.

The attention of the Commission has been directed to the fact that the private bankers gross receipts tax has yielded for a number of years a very small sum, amounting in the year ending May 31, 1926, to $61,723. This is much less than is paid by similar businesses to neighboring States. In the interest of equalization of taxes, we recommend that the private bankers gross receipts tax, imposed by the Act of June 13, 1901, be repealed, that the brokers' license tax be reduced to $10.00, and that a tax on net profits on bankers and brokers at the rate of two per cent be substituted (see Chapter IV, Bill No. 8, page 56). This will afford an opportunity for developing methods for administering a net profits tax, which we believe will eventually become of wider application to business within the State.

7. Taxes on Realty.

On account of the reduction in appropriation to the Commission, we have not been able to make a proper investigation of the taxes upon realty imposed by the local governmental units of the State. A superficial investigation, however, points to the conclusion that the increase in State-imposed standards for public schools and highways, including bridges, has brought about a tremendous increase in realty taxation, which leads us to believe that this form of wealth is paying more than its fair share of the burden of taxation. This condition, however, has been accentuated unnecessarily by—

(a) Inequitable methods in the assessment of real property.

(b) Wasteful methods in the assessment of real property.

(c) An unjustifiable extension of the principle of exemptions.

(d) Extravagant methods in the planning of public improvements, which have sometimes resulted in an increase in local indebtedness beyond the capacity of the community.

With reference to the collection and assessment of local taxes, the Commission has already reported its findings and its recommendations.

The exemption of local realty from taxation constitutes one of the serious problems of the State. Attention is directed to the following partial list of taxing districts, in which the exempt realty, according to the present assessment, is greater than 50 per cent of the taxable realty. It is to be noted, moreover, that many assessors do not revise their assessments of exempt realty, and consequently the true condition is probably even more acute than these figures would indicate.

In the entire State, the assessed value of all real estate in 1924 was $9,141,929,946, and the assessed value of exempt realty was $1,120,565,089, or 12.26 per cent.

In the City of Philadelphia, the assessed value of all realty for 1925 was $3,251,843,893, and the assessed value of exempt realty was $480,375,644, or 14.77 per cent, including the following classes:

[1] These companies pay a capital stock tax and gross receipts tax to the State.

The exempted property may be divided into three general classes:

(1) The real estate owned by the United States, the Commonwealth, counties and various political subdivisions.

(2) Property owned by churches, charitable institutions and educational institutions.

(3) Real estate of public utilities paying capital stock tax direct to the Commonwealth.

It has been generally conceded that the first class, or public property, should be exempt from local taxation on the theory that taxing this property merely takes money from one branch of the government and transfers it to another. In many instances, however, the exemption works an injustice upon local taxpayers, as public property located in the taxing district serves the Commonwealth or a territory much larger than the taxing unit. It would seem therefore that State institutions, such as insane asylums and penitentiaries which serve the entire State, should be required to pay an annual charge to the support of local government in lieu of local taxation. We have therefore reported a bill providing for such a charge on State lands. (See Chapter IV, Bill No. 9, page 56.)

The State forest reservations now pay a stipulated sum per acre to aid in the maintenance of local government. The amount of such aid, however, should be increased, since the exemption of forest reservations is exceedingly burdensome in some counties of the State.

The most serious situation arises out of the second class of property, consisting of churches, religious institutions, charities and educational institutions.

The Constitution of Pennsylvania, Article 9, Section 1, provides as follows:

> All taxes shall be uniform, upon the same class of subjects, within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, and shall be levied and collected under general laws; but the General Assembly may, by general laws, exempt from taxation public property used for public purposes, actual places of religious worship, places of burial not used or held for private or corporate profits, and institutions of purely public charity and real and personal property owned, and used by any branch post or camp of honorably discharged soldiers, sailors and marines. (Amendment of November 6, 1923.)

There have been several Acts of Assembly which exempt property from taxation. The latest Act is that of March 17, 1925, P. L. 39, which provides:

> That all churches, meeting-houses, or other regular places of stated worship, with the ground thereto annexed necessary for the occupancy and enjoyment of the same, all burial grounds not used or held for private or corporate profit, all hospitals, universities, colleges, seminaries, academies, associations, and institutions of learning, benevolence, or charity, with the grounds thereto annexed and necessary for the occupancy and enjoyment of the same, founded, endowed and maintained by the public or private charity: Provided, That the entire revenue derived by the same be applied to the support of and to increase the efficiency and facilities thereof, the repair and the necessary increase of grounds and buildings thereof, and for no other purpose; and all school-houses belonging to any county, borough, or school district, all court-houses, jails, poor-houses, and all other public property used for public purposes, with the ground thereto annexed and necessary for the occupancy and enjoyment of the same, and all real and personal property, owned, occupied and used by any branch, post, or camp of honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, be, and the same are hereby, exempted from all and every county, city, borough, township, bounty, road, school and poor tax.

The provisions of this Act apparently exceed the constitutional power. However, prior to this Act, the courts of Pennsylvania were very liberal in determining what property was entitled to exemption. For instance, they have held that under the earlier statutes, the following classes of property were exempted: Churches, Y. M. C. A.'s, homes for deaconesses, educational institutions, property of army and military organizations, parochial schools open to all, tract associations, buildings owned by colleges and used and occupied by instructors and employees.

It is just and proper that the members of each church should bear the burden of supporting their church, and that the taxpayers should not be called upon to aid in supporting churches by exempting their real estate from taxation. The present taxing exemption is, in effect, an appropriation of public money for the support of the churches, and there is not, and cannot be, any complete sparation of State and Church while this condition exists.

Many of the public charities are local in their service and largely benefit the taxing district in which they are located. Others only to a small extent serve the particular locality. Most of the universities and other educational institutions are not intended for mere local service. If public charities and educational institutions are deemed worthy of assistance from the public funds, aid should be extended by direct appropriation for that purpose, and not by the indirect method of tax exemption. The repeal of these exemptions would aid in relieving the heavy burden of local taxes.

It frequently happens that exemptions are permitted by administrative officials without appeal to the courts. We would suggest to taxpayers that, whenever taxable property is declared exempt by administrative officials, a taxpayer's bill should be filed at once, in order to determine the legality of the proposed exemption.

We recommend that the Act of 1925, above quoted, be repealed, and that a new act be passed exempting only the property of the United States, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, the counties and the political subdivisions, taxing all property used for religious, charitable and educational purposes on its land value alone, exempting only the improvements.

Strong arguments have been urged in favor of tax exemption. The principal arguments therefore are well summarized in the report on tax burdens and exemptions published by the National Industrial Conference Board in 1923.

But, on the contrary, it can be said that whenever any real estate is exempt from local taxation, it increases the rate of taxation on every other parcel of real estate in the same taxing district. It calls upon everyone within the district to contribute to the support of all the churches, schools, hospitals, Y. M. C. A.'s, and other public charities.

This question has been considered by a number of semi-public agencies, during the past two years. There is a strong protest from educational and welfare institutions, that, being already overburdened with the problem of financing their works, any additional burden would restrict their usefulness. However commendable the purposes of these institutions may be, it is nevertheless a fact that the rapid increase in welfare facilities and the generous public donations to welfare work are gradually creating a non-taxed class of property which is increasing more rapidly than the wealth of the community, thereby forcing additional tax burdens upon the taxable wealth to an unfair degree. In particular, if welfare agencies concentrate in one district, as they frequently do, they are bound to make an unfair burden upon the taxable wealth of that district.

We believe that the time has come for the State to change its policy with reference to the exemption of realty for educational, charitable and religious purposes, and to insist that each welfare institution shall pay taxes on its land value alone, leaving the improvements exempted. To this end, we report a bill (see Chapter IV, Bill No. 10, page 56).

Moreover, there is reason to believe that property which has once been properly exempt is continued in its exemption long after the original purpose is changed. We have therefore reported a bill requiring every owner of realty claimed to be exempt under existing laws to justify its exemption every three years. (See Chapter IV, Bill No. 11, page 56).

The third class, or property of public utilities, paying capital stock, presents a difficult problem. These exemptions result from court decisions, based to a large extent upon the difficulty of assessing and collecting local taxes under our present law, without disturbing the operation of the utility. The matter of exempting all of the local property of utilities imposes in many communities a serious burden on the taxable real estate. The exemption of utility property is closely related to the matter of taxation of such corporations for State purposes, as they pay not only a capital stock tax but also a tax on gross receipts. To subject this class of property to local taxation would require an adjustment of the State taxes, and the creation of a central authority to review local assessments. We feel that for the present, at least, there is no urgent need for subjecting public utility property to local taxation, but we recommend that the Legislature consider the advisability of returning to local governments a portion of the receipts from State taxation of these utilities.

The Commission feels that these recommendations will not solve the hard problems which are presented to local government by the heavy realty taxes, but we believe that with equitable assessments, central collection, the minimizing of exemption, and proper economy on the part of the local units, a large portion of the present burden may be removed.

8. Local Bond Issues and Sinking Funds.

The attention of the Commission has been directed to the fact that in many cases the law relating to sinking funds for the retirement of bonds of local government has not been complied with. In some cases, no sinking fund whatever is provided, and in others, the sinking fund is applied to other uses, and when the bond issue becomes due, it is necessary to float another issue in order to take up the bonds. Sometimes, this is due to ignorance, as those who are responsible for the provision of the funds may not be acquainted with sound methods for the administration thereof.

From records available we have learned that the present unguided practice of increasing indebtedness is loose, careless, extravagant, without uniformity, and in some cases contrary to the statutes of the Commonwealth and the provisions of its Constitution. This is due largely to the fact that the governing bodies incurring this indebtedness (of which there are more than 5,000 in the State) do not fully comprehend the difference between a councilmanic debt and an electoral debt, nor the necessity of funding permanent debts and requiring their extinguishment by an advance tax levy within the constitutional period. Many small municipalities fail to file the necessary papers in court before increasing indebtedness, and also fail to realize that a debt may be created even though no evidence of the debt is issued. The officers thus become continually liable to a fine of ten thousand dollars ($10,000) and a year's imprisonment.

Sinking fund requirements are frequently not observed and floating indebtedness is forced into the electoral column in order to validate it. Moreover, every Legislature has a host of validating Acts which it is almost compelled to pass to protect the innocent purchaser. Failure to validate would be disastrous to the municipality and to its officers, and perhaps to the purchaser.

The practice of requiring State supervision of local indebtedness has long been used in several States, and we believe that it would be of inestimable value to solicitors and to prospective purchasers. Uniformity in procedure and analysis of requirements would afford each taxpayer the means of learning exact facts and uncovering errors and omissions.

We believe this approval should be given by the Department of Internal Affairs through its Bureau of Municipalities. Municipal indebtedness is of State-wide importance. Millions of dollars are annually invested in these securities for retirement funds for teachers and State employees. The Bureau should have authority to examine sinking funds, supervise their proper maintenance, remedy existing evils and prescribe procedure in aid thereof. There should also be on file in this Bureau copies of the auditors' reports of these political subdivisions, for the information and convenience of taxpayers, investors, contractors and others interested and affected.

The Commission recommends to both State and local governments the use of serial bonds rather than sinking fund bonds, the advantage of which is evident from the figures presented in Exhibit K, page 125.

The Commission suggests that municipalities can readily secure the exact amount of money necessary for sinking fund purposes by levying the tax for such purposes in dollars instead of a mill rate. The Constitution requires municipal authorities, at the time of issuing bonds, to levy an annual tax to pay the interest and sinking fund charges as they accrue. Since assessment valuations vary from year to year, no definite mill rate can be fixed which will exactly meet sinking fund requirements. The amount necessary in any given year may, however, be levied in dollars and cents. The mill rate necessary to produce the amount levied in dollars and cents can then be fixed when the annual levy is made. The Commission is informed that this practice works successfully in a number of municipalities.

Until the Legislature, however, is prepared to prescribe a rule on this subject, we believe that the authority of the Bureau of Municipalities of the Department of Internal Affairs should be enlarged to require all proceedings with reference to bond issues of local government to be reported to it, to insure that they are in due legal form and also with authority to investigate sinking funds in order to determine whether the provisions of the law are being complied with. It is not believed that this increased authority will be onerous to the local governmental unit, but rather that it will be distinctly helpful, co-operative and economical. To this end, therefore, we report a bill. (See Chapter IV, Bill No. 12, page 56.)

9. Special Funds.

Thirty-four special funds are now listed on the books of the fiscal officers. Several of these, such as the Foreign Fire Insurance Premium Fund and the Liquid Fuels Fund, are not actually created by law, but these moneys must be segregated because they are returned to local districts. In considering the abolition of special funds, it is apparent that certain of the present funds must be maintained. The policy has been established of dedicating the Motor Fund to highway purposes and the Commission believes this to be wise. The moneys derived from fish and game licenses are contributed by sportsmen with the understanding that these moneys will be used only for game and fish propagation and departmental overhead, and these two funds should therefore be preserved. The sinking funds must be preserved to retire the indebtedness of the Commonwealth. The General Sinking Fund is established by the Constitution. There are also a number of trust funds held by the Commonwealth which cannot be disturbed. These are the Workmen's Compensation Insurance Fund, the State College Experimental Farm Fund, the Agricultural Land Script Fund and the several funds for the retirement of school employees. Other funds, such as the Industrial Rehabilitation Fund and the Vocational Education Fund, receive Federal subsidies. There is also an insurance fund for the protection of the property of the Commonwealth and this should also be retained. The remainder of these special funds can, however, be abolished without doing the slightest harm to the work of the government or without any loss of revenue, and the Commission recommends that they be forthwith abolished and that the moneys and securities now held in these funds be paid into the General Fund and be made available for appropriation. A bill is hereby submitted to accomplish this purpose. (See Chapter IV, Bill No. 13, page 56.)

10. Motor License Fees.

The Commission has given attention to the important question as to whether the present schedule of motor license fees is equitable and whether it is yielding an adequate revenue to the Commonwealth. With respect to passenger cars, the data presented to us indicate that the smaller, lighter cars are paying a reasonable share toward the maintenance of the highway system, and we therefore recommend that no change be made in the minimum fee of $10.00 now imposed.

It has been convincingly brought to our attention, however, that the present basis upon which the amount of the passenger-car fee is determined, namely horse-power alone, is an unfair criterion. We recommend, therefore, that the permanent State Tax Commission, if created, give study to this question and report to the next Session of the General Assembly a substitute for the present system in the form of a schedule of fees based more nearly upon the weight, size, and cost of the car, rather than upon its horsepower alone. The new schedule of fees, when adopted, should in our judgment provide for the payment of considerably increased fees by the heaviest and most powerful passenger cars, while the light, small cars may very properly pay approximately the same fees as at present.

With respect to motor truck fees, the need for immediate legislation is more pressing, and the Commission has accordingly formulated definite recommendations which we urge for adoption at this session of the Legislature. The Highway Department has submitted data showing the additional amounts that would have to be collected in motor truck fees to cover interest and sinking fund on the extra width and thickness of pavement, which are required by trucks of 18,000 pounds gross weight and over. The testimony of highway experts, moreover, fortified by extensive road-impact tests conducted by the Federal Government over a period of years, is convincing proof that the wear and tear of the solid-tire truck upon the highway is by no means compensated by the additional 25 per cent now collected on solid tires as compared with pneumatic. Some authorities even go so far as to say that solid-tire trucks, because of their destructiveness, should be barred from the highways altogether. Without going to such an extreme, the Commission believes that solid-tire trucks should pay substantially more than pneumatic-tire trucks of the same weight, and the general proposition is submitted that the fee for solid tires should be at least 50 per cent greater than for pneumatic tires.

On the basis of the authorities data above referred to, the Commission has prepared a revised schedule of fees, designated Proposal B, page 128, which carries with it the unanimous endorsement of the entire Commission. A similar, but somewhat lower, schedule of fees is also shown as Proposal A. Several members of the Commission, however, believe that these proposals do not go far enough and that the rates on the heaviest trucks should be still higher. This view is embodied in Proposal C which also appears on page 128. In all of these alternative proposals which are submitted to the Legislature for consideration at this Session, it will be noted that the rates for solid tires are in every case 50 per cent greater than for pneumatic tires. It should be observed, furthermore, that these proposals make practically no changes in the rates for pneumatic tires in the first four classes R, S, T, and U, since the increase have been considered necessary only on heavy pneumatic-tire trucks and on trucks equipped with solid tires.

Various motor bus companies have submitted to the Commission the difficulties caused to their business through a multiplication of local fees and charges. The Commission feels that this situation may develop in such a manner as to constitute a real hardship to a necessary and important business. It is, however, without the data at the present time upon which to base a recommendation, and, therefore, concludes that this subject should be considered by the permanent State Tax Commission, when created.

11. Bonus on Corporation Charters.

In the Report of the Commission for 1925, a statement was submitted as to the rates of bonus for corporation charters charged by adjacent States (Report of 1925, page 12) From this statement it would seem clear that the bonus charged by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, viz., one-third of one per cent, is so high as to discourage incorporating within this State. This is a matter of serious concern, as it has led to many businesses, which would naturally be incorporated in Pennsylvania, seeking incorporation in other States. We, therefore, renew our recommendation that the bonus rate for corporation charters be reduced to one-tenth of one per cent, and have reported a bill to this end. (See Chapter IV, Bill No. 14, page 56.)

In this bill we are also providing for a bonus on an original issue of stock without nominal or par value, and also when the corporation is changing its capitalization from stock with par value to stock without par value, thereby correcting a situation which has become acute since the decision of the Supreme Court in Commonwealth v. Wayne Sewerage Co., 287 Pa. 42.

12. Assessment of Forest Lands and Lands Containing Metals, Minerals, etc.

In view of the importance of realty in the plan of local taxation special attention should be directed to the fact that there are certain lands, which, if assessed at fair market value, will probably result in a tax burden on the owners too heavy for successful business. Lands which contain coal, oil and other minerals and metals, or forest lands which are devoted to the raising of a crop which is only marketed at long intervals, belong in a special class and should be so treated. Many of the States in which a like condition exists have worked out a plan of assessment for purposes of local taxation, in which the emphasis is laid upon the output of the land in determining the realty tax basis. Where, for instance, the surface is farm land but there is a valuable bed of coal underneath the surface the assessment should be based upon the value of the surface for farming purposes and the output of the coal mine, rather than the market value of the coal in the veins

We are convinced that the relation between practical forestry and taxation has not in the past received due attention at the hands of legislators. The twofold question of development and conservation of the forest leads to tax difficulties perhaps greater than those encountered in the case of any other natural resource. That this class of property is capable of bearing a portion of the financial burden of government is not to be doubted. Yet the unflinching application of the general property tax to forest property can hardly be defended either in theory or in practice. The excessive tax burden has indeed in many instances hastened the cutting of the timber and, has therefore often run counter to a sound conservation program.

Pennsylvania in 1913 enacted a law, excellent in theory, which provided for the establishment of auxiliary forest reserves, whereby the owners of surface land may upon application to the State Forestry Reservation Commission have their lands classified as an auxiliary forest reserve, providing they agree to care for the trees in accordance with the instructions and directions of the Forestry Commission. In such event the lands so classified are valued for taxation purposes not in excess of one dollar per acre, excepting, however, lands underlaid with minerals. In addition, there shall be paid to the county treasurer ten per cent of the value of the trees at the time of harvesting.

There is much merit both in taxing forest lands as other unimproved lands and also in placing the major burden as near to the time the crop is harvested as can be conveniently done. If, however, the whole levy were placed on "the cut," this might lead to the exemption of many valuable lands and therefore result in land speculation rather than timber culture. The unwillingness of timber owners to agree to the regulative uncertainties of a Forestry Commission program of timber culture have prevented the legislation from being of any great practical consequence in forest development and conservation.

In recent years attention has been given anew to several alternative suggestions regarding the taxation of growing timber. Among these may be mentioned the following:

(1) That timber land be taxed as other property on its bare land value.

(2) That timber be assessed at its full market value and taxed under the general property tax, a State Tax Commission in cooperation with a State Forester, laying down more definite rules of assessment than now prevail.

(3) That mature timber be assessed at its full market value and taxed under the general property tax, but the value of growing timber be exempted.

(4) That timber be classified as a growing crop and exempted from all taxation.

We do not believe that the problems of forest development and conservation can be solved through taxation alone, but we do believe that much can be accomplished through a fuller measure of cooperation between individuals and the government. Under existing conditions, private individuals can hardly be expected to embark upon any considerable timber-culture development. "A more stable kind of forest ownership, divorced from manufacture to a larger degree than now, must come about before the ills of the lumber business can be permanently cured. . . . The extension of public forest ownership, State and national alike, should have a large part in bringing this about."

These questions are so complicated that they will require special study and also an examination into the methods used by other States; in which we would commend for study particularly the methods of the State of Minnesota.

We, therefore, recommend that the proposed permanent State Tax Commission be directed to give special attention to this subject and to report its findings at the next Session of the Legislature.

13. Proposed Amendment to Capital Stock Tax Law.

The recent decision of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in Commonwealth v. Sunbury Converting Works, 286 Pa. 545, has caused considerable confusion to the corporations engaged in an interstate business with reference to their assessment for the capital stock tax. Under the authority of an earlier decision, Commonwealth v. Westinghouse Air Brake Co., 251 Pa. 127, the practice had been approved that, where a corporation owned all of the capital stock of another corporation whose property was located in another State and controlled the same as a subsidiary, in assessing the value of the capital stock on the domestic corporation for purposes of taxation, a deduction was allowed for the value of the stock of the subsidiary. The decision in the case of the Sunbury Converting Works has reversed this practice, and consequently has suggested to a large number of domestic corporations, which are engaged in an interstate business, the advisability of re-incorporating in another State, when as a foreign corporation its capital stock tax would be based solely upon the assets in the State of Pennsylvania. We believe that this is an unfortunate tendency, as the corporations which are primarily concerned with business here should not be compelled to become foreign corporations through inequities in the taxing system. We, therefore, recommend an act which will restore the practice which prevailed under the Westinghouse decision and which was found to be satisfactory to the Commonwealth. (See Chapter IV, Bill No. 15, page 57.)

14. Insurance

(a) The Commission renews its former recommendations relative to taxing marine insurance companies at a rate of five per cent on net underwriting profits instead of the pesent tax on gross receipts. (See Chapter IV Bill No. 16, page 57.)

It will be recalled, from the Report of 1925, that this recommendation was based on the fact that the insurance companies of this Commonwealth have not engaged in marine insurance to any large extent and that they cannot successfully compete with foreign marine insurance companies unless they are taxed on net profits, which is the method of taxation in foreign countries, rather than on gross receipts. The recommendation of the Commission is in harmony with the recent Act of Congress upon this subject, and also the recent legislation in other States where attention is being directed to the importance of enabling the companies, which engage in marine insurance, to compete with foreign companies on equal terms.

(b) The Commission, in its previous Report, proposed an amendment to Section 24, Act of June 1, 1889, as amended, which imposes a tax on gross premiums. This amendment was enacted into law after being amended during its passage through the Legislature.

One of the purposes of the Commission's amendment was to insure the continued exemption of domestic mutual companies other than life from the tax imposed by Section 24, which exemption these companies enjoyed continuously from the passage of the Act of 1889 until 1923, when the taxing officers refused to allow this exemption.

In proposing this amendment in 1925, it was not the intention to exempt mutual life companies, for the reason that they had not previously enjoyed this exemption. The amendment has, however, been construed to exempt them. The Commission, therefore, recommends that this section be amended to restore the tax on mutual life companies. (See Chapter IV, Bill No. 17, page 57.)

CHAPTER III.

A PERMANENT FINANCIAL POLICY FOR THE FUTURE.

From present advices, it is believed that upon the conclusion of the fiscal year on May 31, 1927, there will be a surplus in the general fund of the Commonwealth. Assuming that the productivity of the main sources of revenue of the State will continue during the next bienium, it would seem appropriate at this time to equalize the tax burden of the State by the readjustment which have been recommended in Chapter II of this Report.

After a few years, however, when the cost of maintaining the highway system has reached its full development and the State contribution to the public schools has also developed as indicated in the report of the Superintendent of Public Instruction, additional sources of revenue for the Commonwealth may be needed. In order to prepare the way for a full consideration of this situation, the Commission desires to record its conclusions, in order that they may be considered by the citizen body in preparing for the revision of the fiscal system, which we regard as inevitable.

The Commission concludes that the taxation of certain businesses on a special basis and at special rates is inequitable, and therefore finds that the anthracite sales tax and the mercantile license tax offended against any well-considered system of taxation. We feel, furthermore, that in taxing business it is unfair to have the entire burden borne by capital taxes rather than profits, and that the business which is conducted at a greater rate of profit may fairly be expected to assume a larger portion of the burden.

The Commission, in its Report of 1925, directed attention to the inequitable incidence of the capital stock tax, which is much more burdensome to those branches of business, which from their nature result in a comparatively small rate of profits upon invested capital, than it is upon those which by reason of specially favorable conditions are highly profitable. And to the same corporation the burden of the tax is much more onerous in years of loss, or subnormal gains, than in the years when its operations return more than the average profit. Although the tax may be assessed upon the asset value, or on the market price of the shares, there are many corporations for which neither asset value nor market value closely correspond with earning capacity.

In order to remove the inequalities in the existing system of corporation taxes, and to provide for a just distribution of the burden which must be assumed in the future, as the needs of the Commonwealth to which we have referred become manifest, two views have been advanced in the Commission. As the revenues at present are sufficient to meet the existing needs of the State and probably will be sufficient to meet any reasonable increase in those needs in the near future, regard having been had to suitable economies, there seems to be no present necessity to recommend any change in the existing system of taxation; but when the needs of the State for revenue increase, this question will become acute and the Commission therefore presents both of said views for the consideration of future Legislatures which may be met with the problem.

First. After a prolonged study of this feature of the tax problem, some of the members of the Commission are convinced that the inequalities of the existing capital stock tax, including those which arise from the exemption of manufacturing, publishing, and laundry companies, can all be obviated by the repeal of that tax and the substitution for it of a tax upon net profits to be apportioned at the same rate to all businesses whether conducted by corporation, limited partnerships, general partnerships, associations or individuals; that such a tax on net profits would have a direct and constant relationship to tax paying ability; that it would dispose of all apprehensions that new industries would not locate in Pennsylvania and that some of those now here would migrate elsewhere. If the profits of the business are small, the tax would be negligible; if the tax is large, it would only be so in consequence of large profits, and, being but a very small percentage of the profits, would not be a factor of sufficient influence to be prejudicial to a Pennsylvania habitat.

These members of the Commission therefore recommend that when in the judgment of the Legislature the time is opportune for so important a change in the system of business taxation, the capital stock tax be entirely abandoned, and also the following business taxes now in force:

Anthracite sales tax.
Corporate loans tax.
Mercantile license tax.

In their stead, it is recommended that there be adopted a tax on net profits at such rate as will yield the requisite revenue, computed upon the average of profits for the three years next preceding that in which the tax becomes due; that the tax be applicable alike to corporations, associations, limited liability companies, copartnerships and individuals engaged in the same kind of business, exempting in the case of each taxable, $1,000 of net profits.

They also recommend that the form of return for computation of these taxes be made the same as that used for the Federal corporate profits tax. There would necessarily be some difference in the computation of the Federal and State tax, but the return upon which the tax is made up could be adapted so that the labor and expense of preparing the tax return would be much less than at present; and if, in the judgment of the Legislature, it would not be expedient to make so extensive a change in the tax system at one time, they suggest that the profits tax might first be applied to one or more classes of business and subsequently extended to others as soon thereafter as may be considered advisable.

Second. Other members of the Commission feel that such a radical change in a system of taxation, which has grown up in this Commonwealth over a period of years in which the capital stock tax has become a settled feature, and has been the subject of repeated judicial decisions, until the various questions as to the construction of the law have been well settled and the requirements of the law well understood by officers of corporations, would result in confusion and doubt, leading to litigation, and might seriously jeopardize the revenues of the Commonwealth while questions under the new system were being settled; and that however desirable in theory this proposed system of profits taxation might be, the practical results cannot be forseen. They are very doubtful whether such an assessment based on three years' business would be sustained by the courts. They feel therefore that any change in the present system intended to afford more revenue to the State should be slowly and carefully worked out.

The recommendation of these members, therefore, would be that the capital stock tax be continued as to all companies which now pay it, with a reduction of one mill in the sum of the tax, viz., from five mills to four mills, except as to public utilities, which should continue at the present rate; that a net profits tax be imposed upon all corporations in the State, and upon limited partnerships and associations, including manufacturing companies, at a rate not exceeding two per cent per annum, except public utilities paying the gross receipts tax; that this tax do not include individuals, but that as to them, the mercantile license tax be continued (repealed, however, as to corporations); that the gross receipts be continued upon public utilities, which would not in that event be subject to the profits tax; that no present consideration be given to the repeal of the anthracite sales tax, which should continue until a profits tax is substituted, and that any amendment of the corporate loans tax be with the idea that it or its substitute should continue regardless of the profits tax.

This plan, in the judgment of these members of the Commission, would result in a gradual transfer of the system of taxation from a capital stock tax to a profits tax only if experience showed that a profits tax would be the correct system, resulting equitably in the necessary revenue to meet the future needs of the Commonwealth.

From the standpoint of taxation, the public utilities are in a peculiar class, inasmuch as their rates are fixed by the Public Service Commission, and hence they are subject to public regulation. From present experience, it would seem that the present method of taxing public utilities on their gross receipts is equitable and easily administered. We would suggest, however, that if the capital stock tax is eventually repealed as to all corporations, there be an increase in the rate made for the distribution of a portion of this increase on some equitable basis, to be devised by the proposed State Tax Commission and approved by the Legislature, to the local districts where the realty of the utilities, used in the exercise of their franchises and now exempt from local taxation, is located. Additional study should be given to this question, however, in order that an equitable plan may be devised.

A summary of the gains and losses of revenue of these two plans is hereto appended.

The proper form of business taxation should be carefully considered by the proposed State Tax Commission, and it may be that the opportunity will offer for a solution of the problem in conjunction with the tax commissions of neighboring States. Any conclusion which would simplify and unify the fiscal systems of the States, so as to relieve business of the burden of preparing a number of tax reports according to a variety of laws imposing a number of taxes, would be highly preferable to the existing chaos.

In general, it must be remembered that Pennsylvania is a growing Commonwealth, increasing in population, industrial effectiveness and wealth. Its expenditures along legitimate lines will probably involve an increasing sum each year, and those expenditures cannot be checked without seriously hampering the developments of the Commonwealth. The Commission sees no reason to alter the conclusion expressed in the 1925 Report that within ten years the program of the State will require an expenditure of from one hundred and eighty million dollars to two hundred million dollars per year. Due consideration of the fiscal requirements of the State demands that serious attention shall be given to planning for the realization of this expectation.

Respectfully submitted,

While I concur with my colleagues in the recommendations with respect to inheritance taxes,, I nevertheless desire to go on record again in favor of a progressive inheritance tax with a two-fold graduation of rates and exemptions according to the amounts of the legacies and to the degree of relationship of the legatees. Such a plan, in my judgment, finds justification both on the doctrine of ability to pay and in the varying strength of the claims of the several classes of heirs. It is apparent that the ability of the legatees to pay increases much faster than the value of the shares. It is equally apparent to me, that there is abundant justification in imposing progressively heavier rates on the shares of the more distantly related heirs and strangers in blood than on those of heirs of the first degree.

Furthermore I am in favor of a progressive personal income tax. Especially is this urged in the event of the adoption of a flat-rate levy on business incomes.

Since the present Constitution does not permit the imposition of either of the foregoing taxes, I recommend an amendment which will confer such power upon the General Assembly.

MARION K. McKAY.

So far as the conclusions contained above, regarding a permanent financial policy for the future, spring from speculation upon an emergency which has not yet arisen or are based upon incomplete figures the accuracy of which cannot yet be called absolute, thus far must those conclusions be considered to be tentative rather than final. They can but represent, in our opinion, the best collective judgment of the Commission at the time. Subject to this qualification of view, we concur in the conclusions expressed in Chapter III of the report.

In raising the question of the exemption from taxation of realty held for religious, charitable and educational purposes, the Commission has sought to do two things—to establish a principle, and to provide a substantial relief to local taxpayers. The bill proposed does neither. It would be better, logically, to await the deveopment of a definite consensus of public opinion for acceptance or rejection of the principle, than to adopt a compromise.

The creation of a tax commission, as set forth in Chapter II of the report, is a make-shift. It deals with four classes of taxation, and if it is wise to create a commission, such a commission should have broad general powers and include all forms of taxation. It is a step backward in tax reform, and I am in favor of the creation of a tax commission which will have broad general powers, and include all classes of taxation. I cannot agree to this portion of the report of the Commission.

CHAPTER IV.

SUMMARY OF LEGISLATION PROPOSED.

The Commission submits herewith a summary of twenty bills and resolutions, which it recommends to the favorable consideration of the General Assembly. As these bills will be introduced contemporaneously with the presentation of this Report, and will then be printed for the legislative calendar, it has been deemed economical not to include the text in full in this Report, but merely a brief analysis of the contents.

1. STATE TAX COMMISSION BILL. This bill creates a State Tax Commission, composed of three commissioners, which is to administer and enforce the inheritance tax laws, the mercantile license tax laws, to have general supervision over the assessment and collection of the four-mills county tax on intangible personal property, and to ascertain ways and means of improving the administration in the collection of that tax, and to determine the true assessed valuation per teacher of school districts on which basis the State subsidy to schools is distributed. This duty is now performed by the State Council of Education. In addition, the permanent commission would be continually engaged in a study of the subject of taxation and be in a position to advise the Legislature on the systems of taxation which should be adopted. The three commissioners are to be appointed by the Governor.

2. LOCAL TAXATION BILLS. These bills relate to the assessment and collection of local taxes. The bills codify and revise the existing laws relating to these subjects and in many respects follow the bill known as the Marshall-Ludlow bill, which was drafted by the Tax Law Revision Commission created in 1919. Among the departures from the former bill are to be noted provisions saving the terms of office of all assessors and collectors now in office until their expiration, reducing the number of subordinate assessors which can be appointed, requiring the members of the county board to be persons having a knowledge of taxation and familiarity with the value of property, and restoring the power of the county board to equalize assessments, instead of taking into consideration only the actual value of the property.

The collection bill adopts the system of having all local taxes collected by the county treasurer, except in cities of the first, second and third class where the city and school taxes are to be collected as at present. The taxes would be payable in semi-annual instalments and payment could be made to the county treasurer, or to any bank, or to a collector who would sit for that purpose from time to time in districts where there is no bank. The fee system for the collection of taxes would be abolished and the cost of collection materially reduced, with added convenience to taxpayers. Each taxpayer would annually receive one tax bill (in cities of the third class, two), which would set forth all local taxes payable for the year.

3. REBATES ON LOCAL TAXES BILL. Alternative bills are submitted either to grant a rebate of 5 per cent on county taxes in cities or to provide that no rebates should be allowed on any local taxes.

4. SUBJECTS OF LOCAL TAXATION BILL. In the event that the code on the assessment of local taxes is not adopted, this bill is submitted to tax privately-owned improvements erected on public lands.

5. TRANSFER INHERITANCE TAX BILLS. (a) One bill rewrites the transfer inheritance tax law and provides for the taxation of three classes: (1) Direct heirs at 2 per cent; (2) brothers and sisters, and educational, charitable and religious institutions at 5 per cent; and (3) collaterals at 10 per cent. In addition to the present deductions, the bill allows a deduction of five thousand dollars ($5,000) in each estate.

Another clause provides for reciprocity with States in the collection of taxes on intangible personal property, and no tax would be collected on such property where the decedent is a resident of a State which does not impose a tax on intangible personal property of non-residents, or which recognizes the doctrine of reciprocity.

The bill centralizes the administration and collection of the tax in a State Tax Commission, eliminates the register of wills as the collector of these taxes, and provides for the payment of all appraisers from appropriations instead of from the tax realized in each estate. The bill follows in many respects the recommendations of the National Conference on Inheritance Taxation.

The main purpose of the bill is to liberalize the provisions of this law, and centralize the administration in order to reduce the cost of collection.

(b) A second bill is submitted to levy any additional tax necessary to take up the slack between the tax at the above rates and the Federal credit, which amounts to 80 per cent of the Federal tax.

6. FOREIGN FIDUCIARIES BILL. This bill amends clause (c) of the Fiduciaries Act of the seventh day of June, one thousand nine hundred and seventeen (P. L. 447), so as to eliminate the requirement for the probate of wills and letters of administration under which foreign fiduciaries are acting. The bill is considered a companion to the reciprocity clause in the transfer inheritance tax bill and simplifies and reduces the cost of administering and settling estates of persons not domiciled in Pennsylvania.

7. INTANGIBLE PERSONAL PROPERTY TAX BILL. This bill amends sections one and seventeen of the act of seventeenth day of June, one thousand nine hundred and thirteen (P. L. 507). Section one of this act now imposes the four-mills tax on mortgages, stocks and bonds for county purposes. The amendment proposed would eliminate the tax on bank deposits, and simplify the provisions of the section so that taxpayers could more readily ascertain the kind of securities taxable.

The amendment to section seventeen has two purposes: first, to exempt from the corporate loans tax all bonds issued by municipalities and municipal districts; and second, to exempt securities of first class corporations.

8. NET PROFITS TAX BILL APPLYING TO BANKERS AND BROKERS. This bill proposes a tax of two per centum on the net profits of private bankers, investment bankers and brokers. It repeals the present tax on the gross income of private bankers, and a companion bill reduces the license fee on brokers to ten dollars per year. At present these fees are graduated from a minimum of ten dollars to a maximum of one hundred dollars.

Net profits are defined as being gross income less the expenses of doing business, losses incurred during the year not covered by insurance, interest received from Federal and State bonds, taxes paid on capital stock and corporate loans, and taxes paid to municipalities and municipal subdivisions.

9. ANNUAL CHARGE ON LANDS OF STATE INSTITUTIONS BILL. This bill is for the relief of municipal districts having within their borders State institutions. It would impose an annual charge on the lands of such institutions at the rate of ten cents per acre for roads, and fifteen cents per acre for schools. The charge would be equivalent to a five-mills tax on a fifty-dollar valuation.

10. EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION BILL. This bill restates the law providing for the exemption of property from local taxation. The purpose of the bill is to change the present law and to provide for the taxation of lands owned by religious, educational and charitable institutions, exempting from taxation, however, the improvements erected thereon.

11. JUSTIFYING EXEMPTIONS FROM TAXATION BILL. This would require every owner at each triennial assessment to prove to the taxing authorities the fact that property claimed to be exempt from taxation is actually used for such purposes as entitles it to exemption under existing laws. The purpose of the bill is to enable the taxing authorities to locate real estate which through change in ownership or character of use may no longer be entitled to exemption from taxation.

12. MUNICIPAL INDEBTEDNESS BILL. This bill would require municipal districts, except first and second class cities, to submit the proceedings relating to the increase of indebtedness to the Bureau of Municipalities of the Department of Internal Affairs. The Bureau would be required to pass upon the legality of the proceedings, but would not be given authority to pass upon the purpose of the loan nor its amount, except to ascertain that the loan would fall within the constitutional limit on borrowing power.

The Bureau would also be required to investigate sinking funds and see that municipalities were levying sufficient moneys to meet interest and sinking fund requirements. Additional restrictions are placed on the issue of refunding bonds.

13. SPECIAL FUNDS BILL. This bill proposes to abolish a number of the special funds, the moneys now being paid into these funds to be credited to the General Fund. The bill saves the sinking funds, the Motor Fund, the Game Fund, the Fish Fund, the State Insurance Fund, the several trust funds, and the funds in which Federal moneys are deposited.

14. CORPORATION BONUS BILL. This bill codifies six separate law swhich now relate to the collection of bonus on capital stock of domestic corporations, limited partnerships and joint-stock associations, and on capital employed in the State by foreign corporations, limited partnerships and joint-stock associations. The main purpose is to reduce the bonus tax from one-third of one per centum to one-tenth of one per centum. The secondary purpose is to codify the existing law and to assure the collection of bonus on all stock without nominal or par value, correcting the defect in the existing law as pointed out in Commonwealth v. Wayne Sewerage Co., 287Pa. 42.

15. ASSESSMENT OF CAPITAL STOCK TAX BILL. This bill modifies the method of assessing capital stock taxes and is drawn to overcome the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Commonwealth v. Sunbury Converting Works, 286 Pa. 545, which reversed the case of Commonwealth v. Westinghouse Airbrake Co., 251 Pa. 283. The bill would exempt domestic corporations owning all of the shares of stock, except necessary qualifying shares, of a subsidiary from paying the tax on so much of the value of such stock as represents tangible property without the Commonwealth.

16. MARINE INSURANCE TAX BILL. This bill proposes to tax marine insurance companies on underwriting companies on underwriting profits rather than on gross premiums. Its purpose is to tax such companies in the same manner as they are taxed in other jurisdictions and therefore to encourage marine insurance companies to locate in Pennsylvania. The bill specifically povides the system by which such underwriting profits are to be determined.

17. INSURANCE PREMIUMS TAX BILL. This bill further amends section twenty-four of the act of first day of June, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-nine (P. L. 420), which imposes a tax on premiums of insurance companies. The purpose of the bill is to assure that all companies pay this tax, except purely fire mutuals which have no capital stock or no accumulated reserve.

18. GASOLINE TAX BILL. This bill would adopt a permanent tax of two cents per gallon on liquid fuels. At present the permanent tax is one cent, the additional tax of one cent expiring the thirtieth day of June, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-seven.

19. CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS. First, increasing the per centum of indebtedness for county purposes from seven to ten, and in Philadelphia from ten to fourteen, and limiting such percentage to taxable realty. The purpose is to exclude borrowing on intangible personal property and at the same time to safeguard existing indebtedness.

Second, authorizing the Legislature to pass tax laws granting efflxmptions or rebates to non-residents of States which grant similar exemptions and rebates to residents of this State.

Both of these amendments passed at the Session of 1925, and are now submitted for passage the second time.

20. RESOLUTION RELATING TO FEDERAL ESTATE TAX. There is presented herewith the text of a Joint Resolution submitted to the General Assembly for its consideration at the Session of 1927.

Whereas, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in one thousand eight hundred and twenty-six inaugurated the practice of providing needed revenue for the State by taxation of inheritance; and

Whereas, This practice has been followed by the vast majority of the States of the Union, so that inheritance taxes have become a necessary and important feature of the fiscal system of the States; and

Whereas, The Federal Government in the past has only entered the field of the inheritance taxation in war time as an emergency measure; and

Whereas, The increasing financial burden upon State Governments makes it necessary to conserve every logical source of revenue;

Therefore (if the Senate concur), Be it resolved, That, in the judgment of the General Assembly, taxes on the transfer of property by inheritance should be reserved to the State Government, and that the Federal Government should now withdraw from this field and leave to the States exclusively this much-needed source of revenue;

Resolved, That a copy of this Resolution be sent to the Senators and Representatives from Pennsylvania in the Congress of the United States.

21. MORTGAGE REGISTRATION TAX BILL. This bill amends the intangible personal property tax by abolishing the annual four-mills tax on mortgages held by residents of Pennsylvania, and substituting therefor a mortgage registration tax of five mills to be paid on all mortgages at the time of recording.

I. LETTER AND STATEMENT OF ACTING SECRETARY OF HIGHWAYS

Commonwealth of Pennsylvania
Department of Highways

Harrisburg, September 9, 1926.

Hon. Franklin S. Edmonds, Chairman,
Commonwealth of Pennsylvania Tax Commission,
111 South Fifteenth Street,
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

My dear Mr. Edmonds:

Referring to your letters of June 23 and July 2, a revision of our analysis of the financial problem as given in the preliminary report of the Commission is attached, and we wish to call your attention to the statement showing the general operating and maintenance costs per mile of hard-surfaced roads on the State Highway System in 1924, being based on 4,660 miles of hard-surfaced roads, which is $4,350.62 per mile instead of the figure of $4,742 per mile, as used in the preliminary report of the Commission. The figure of $4,742 per mile was incorrect and, as you will notice by referring to Table 20 on page 128 of the report, the figure of $4,363.02 was furnished, this being based on eleven months' actual expenditures and the estimated expenditures for December, 1924.

In revising this figure to the amount of $4,350.62 per mile, we want you to understand that this includes all the operating and maintenance expenses of the Department, except the earth-road maintenance and the maintenance of the State-aid roads off the Highway System. The operating and maintenance cost per mile in 1924, without deducting the earth-road maintenance and the State-aid maintenance off the highway system, was $5,028 per mile, and we estimate this will be about $5,001 for 1926, based on the 1924 mileage; whereas the estimated cost per mile of actual improved mileage on the State Highway System in 1926, after deducting the earth-road maintenance and the maintenance of the State-aid roads, is $3,531, based on 6,069 miles, while it would be $4,599, based on 4,660 miles or the 1924 mileage. The total operating cost, including the State-aid maintenance and the maintenance of earth roads, will be about $3,840 per mile, based on 6,069 miles, or about $5,001, based on 4,660 miles.

The lower figures, however, cannot be used as a basis of future expenditures because they are too low, and we feel that the 1924 figure of $4,350.62 is more representative of the average operating expenses and maintenance cost per mile, because during this administration we have constructed many miles of new highways on which there are practically no maintenance costs. Therefore, after making a careful analysis of the 1924, 1925 and 1926 costs, we are still assuming that an average of about $4,350 for operating and maintenance costs per mile of hard-surfaced roads on the State Highway System, which was the figure for 1924, is approximately correct and is the figure to be used at this time.

The revised statement on an actual basis should be substituted for Table 20, and, after revising the maintenance costs per mile, we have revised the text with the revised figures. The text, of course, will show approximately what it will cost to complete the highway system, assuming that there will be about 15,000 miles of State highways within the next ten years.

With reference to the revision of the system of license fees, with particular reference to heavier chages upon motor trucks, we are of the belief that the fees for trucks which require a heavier and wider pavement should be increased in order that these classes of heavy and wide trucks will pay the sinking fund and interest charges on the additional cost of construction. I will have information concerning this proposed revision in fees to submit to you at Pittsburgh.

With kind regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

W. H. CONNELL,
Engineering Executive and Acting Secretary of Highways.

REVISED STATEMENT OF STATE HIGHWAY OPERATING AND MAINTENANCE COSTS.

Assuming that the State system provided by existing legislation and amounting to a construction of approximately 12,000 miles, (including the roads added to the State Highway System by the Legislature of 1925), of which about one-third is in the primary system and about two-thirds in the secondary system, is to be completed and maintained as provided by existing law, special attention should be directed to the answers of William H. Connell, Acting Secretary of Highways, dated September 8, 1926, to questions submitted by the Commission.

First: When, in your judgment, will the State program of construction, involving approximately 12,000 miles, be completed, and how much of an additional loan will be required to do this work?

When the money from the present $50,000,000 bond issue is exhausted, there will still be about 4,000 miles of unimproved road on the State highway system. Based on an average cost of $46,000 per mile, it will require additional loan funds or appropriation in amount of $184,000,000 to complete the paving of the system. A conservative rate of progress for this work would be about 700 miles per year, provided the funds are available. It would, theefore, take six years under such conditions to complete the paving.

Second: What would be a fair annual average for maintenance after the highway system is completed? In maintenance, include resurfacing, surface treatment of roads, etc., but do not include cost of sinking fund on highway bonds.

The average annual cost per mile of operating and maintenance expenses of the hard surface roads on the State highway system today is $4,350 per vear. This includes labor, material and administrative costs applicable to the maintenance of the roads, elimination of grade crossings and all the general costs applicable to the upkeep of the system; in fact, everything but costs applicable to new construction. It also includes the cost of operation of the Motor Vehicle Registration Bureau, Highway Patrol, etc. While all of these costs are assumed to be the same when the mileage is increased, still some will be more and some less. The acual maintenance costs of the pavement will increase, the grade crossing costs will run along about the same, the overhead for supervision and collection of license fees will, of course, not be the same per mile with double the mileage, but this is a small portion of the total cost so that I think that the best way to project the possible expenses in the future would be to take all construction costs out, as we have, and reduce the rest of the general expenses to a mileage basis. Traffic of course, is increasing at a rate that will double it within the next ten years and this may increase the average annual maintenance cost per mile due to the wear and tear of increased traffic by at least 50 per cent. When the highway system is completed, there will be 12,000 miles of hard-surfaced pavement to be maintained. Based on the assumption that the mileage cost will be approximately the same as stated above, the total cost will be $65,250,000 per year. Assuming a 25 per cent increase in maintenance expenses, which is almost certain due to the increased trucking, etc., the total maintenance cost would be $81,562,500 per year.[1]

Third: Looking ahead ten years, and assuming that all of the work of construction is done by that time, can you give us an idea as to what the annual appropriation for your Department should be ten years hence, assuming that there will be no marked change in the standard of costs in that time?

You will note that assuming there is no new construction the general appropriation of the Department ten years hence based in the above calculations, would have to be from $62,250,000 a year to $81,562,500 a year.

My answers to your questions are simply estimates based on the best available information, that may be very materially altered by changes in the uses to which the highways will be put within the next several years. Maintenance costs, of course, vary with the traffic and these figures are based on the estimated future traffic on the highway system.[1]

[1]In answering the above questions, Mr. Connell has given consideration to the probability that within ten years about 3,000 miles of dirt roads may be added to the system. If there should be no additional mileage of dirt roads added to the system, he estimates that the annual costs for maintenance would be from $52,200,000 to $65,250,000 per year.

It is to be noted that the above expenditures do not include interest and sinking fund upon a bond indebtedness for highway purposes, which may then amount to approximately $300,000,000. Assuming that interest and sinking fund will amount to $18,000,000 per year, based on a conservative annual sinking fund requirement to redeem the bonds and pay the interest, it is evident that the total highway expense for the biennium 1937-39 will be approximately $100,000,000 per year.

Of course, in arriving at this $100,000,000 per year, we base the completion of the highway system on a 100 per cent State obligation. Nevertheless, some of this construction will be done on a fifty-fifty basis in which the counties and townships contribute 50 per cent of the cost. In addition to this, we may receive Federal aid which will reduce this figure. It is believed that through the use of the local aid and Federal aid the revenues derived from the motor licenses and gasoline taxes will be sufficient to pay the maintenance charges as well as the interest and sinking fund requirements on the highway bonds ten years hence.

II. LETTER FROM SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION.

Commonwealth of Pennsylvania
Department of Public Instruction

Harrisburg, June 11, 1926.

Honorable Franklin Spencer Edmonds,
Chairman, Pennsylvania Tax Commission,
111 South Fifteenth Street,
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Dear Mr. Edmonds:

Replying to the questions in your letter of May 21, 1926, may I present the following:

1. My letter to Mr. Van Pelt under date of April 3, 1926, is a revision of the estimate found on page 49 of the preliminary report if the Tax Commission.[1]

2. The figures below present an estimate of the total expenditures of Public Instruction for the biennium 1937-39.

Administration	$950,000
Deaf and blind children	2,454.497
Children placed by the courts, etc. (Sec. 1402)	20,000
Cornplanter Indian School	1,800

Scholarships	56,000
School employes retirement	5,250,000
Special education (Sec. 1413)	1,212,101
Teachers' salaries and closed schools (Sec. 1210)	65,493,177
Transportation	2,200,000
Vocational education	2,391,608
Normal schools	9,000,000
Water conservation, etc.	6,000

3. In general, it is my opinion the present legislation will permit of much advancement and development of education in Pennsylvania. In other words, the development of our program has not yet exhausted the full possibilities of the present laws. As this advancement and development progressses, there will be need for additional appropriations from the State. This is true because education parallels State development and social development in general, and the State sharing in this development must bear its proportionate share as education increases. I refer particularly to such important phases as—

(a) A more general development of kintergarten education.
(b) A gradual lengthening of the school term.
(c) A development of the junior high school with increase in the number of special teachers.
(d) A consequent carrying over, because of the junior high school program, of more pupils into the senior high school.
(e) The extension of education through day and night classes to adults and immigrants.
(f) An increased development of education fitting specifically for the vocations.
(g) The development of a program for physically and mentally handicapped.

This does not take into account the possible development of the junior college, which now is on the threshhold in many States. The present legislation permits of the normal development along all of these lines and always with this development must come some increased subsidy, because State subsidy is distributed on a teacher unit and any development in the educational system which requires additional teachers will require increased State subsidy, in addition to normal increase due to population.

4. The total estimated value of the buildings of the Pennsylvania State normal schools, as revealed in the survey made in 1924, is approximately $9,400,000. The estimated value of the State-owned schools, namely, Thaddeus Stevens Industrial School, Scotland Soldiers' Orphan School, Home for the Training in Speech of Deaf Children, and Pennsylvania Oral School for the Deaf, is approximately $1,500,000. As you doubtless realize, many of these buildings have been in use for many years, and in many instances there is immediate need for remodeling and replacing some of the present buildings by new structures.

In the budget estimate presented to the Legislature for the biennium 1925-27, it was estimated that there should be expended for construction purposes in the normal schools $1,874,500, and for the State-owned schools $86,000, making a total of $1,960,500 needed to place these State-owned educational institutions on a par with modern school facilities as found in the larger school districts of Pennsylvania and in neighboring States.

Should this construction be erected, $1,000,000 would be needed immediately for capital outlay. This would make, at a conservative estimate, the total value of State-owned buildings to be $12,500,000; and assuming, as a conservative estimate, a five per cent charge for depreciation, replacements, repairs, upkeep, etc., the annual amount needed to keep these plants in a fair state of efficiency would be $1,250,000 per biennium. These figures do not include growth needed for the natural expansion of the function served. I hope, by the time our budget is completed, that we will have some estimate projected on a ten-year building program.

Sincerely yours,

FRANCIS B. HAAS,
Superintendent of Public Instruction.

Explanation.—Administration estimates are corrected to exclude Federal aid.

Deaf and blind estimates are projected to provide the cost of education for all deaf and blind children, instead of only the blind babies and blind students attending institutions of higher learning. The projected estimated cost includes the education of all deaf and blind children for whom the Commonwealth is responsible. This includes students at State-aided and State-owned institutions.

Retirement estimates are greatly reduced, due in part to a misunderstanding of the information wanted when the previous estimate was made for the Tax Commission in 1924. The retirement act which provides that the State and municipalities shall pay semi-annually into a special fund, designated as the State Annuity Reserve Fund No. 2, an amount equal to 4 per cent of the total payroll of members of the retirement system for the preceding school year, until this fund is sufficient to care for all prior service. This is in addition to the payment of annuities the cost of service rendered after July 1, 1919. The amount to be paid into Reserve Fund No. 2 is now practically at the maximum limits, the increase in cost from now on being due entirely to increase in number of teachers and salary increments. When this accrued liability to care for prior service has been made up, the cost of the retirement system to the State will be greatly reduced.

III. LETTER FROM THE SECRETARY OF WELFARE.

Commonwealth of Pennsylvania
Department of Welfare

Harrisburg, June 18, 1926.

Mr. Henry W. Van Pelt, Statistician,
Pennsylvania Tax Commission,
State Capitol,
Harrisburg, Pa.

My dear Mr. Van Pelt:

Mr. Hunt has called to my attention your visit and the letter asking for further comment from us in relation to the projected expenditures estimated for the Department over the next ten years.

You ask: Is the analysis of the financial problem of the future, which is given in the preliminary report of the Commission, still to be considered as correct?[1]

Insofar as it is possible for one to make estimates so long in advance, considering the uncertainties of population increase and economic conditions, I may say that I believe the estimates are substantially correct with these exceptions:

(a) Attention has been called to the fact that in the original letter the appropriations for the Mothers' Assistance Fund are not sufficient even at this date, and that to meet the need they should be scaled up about one-third in order to take care of the known waiting list, and the restrictions now placed on the arbitrary legal remainder should be based on maximum grants. This would mean that for the 1927-29 appropriation period there should be an increase to a total of approximately $2,700,000, and following our conservative previous figures, an appropriation for subsequent bienniums as follows:

	Amount
1929-31	$2,700,000
1931-33	3,350,000
1933-35	4,000,000
1935-37	4,000,000

This is based upon the assumption that a preventive program does not diminish the number of widows and orphaned children in proportion to the population, although we believe the contrary would be the case.

(b) Studies made since our original letter was submitted to you in January, 1925, indicate that an expenditure not contemplated previously is necessary to eliminate hazards to life and property in our institutions as they now stand, which would require an expenditure of approximately $2,500,000—this covering known hazards as revealed by inspectors of the Department of Labor and Industry, the Department of Health, and ourselves. Such a sum ought to be made immediately available to clean the whole thing up and not distribute it over a series of years.

You also ask: Assuming that there is no change in the program of the State by legislation, and assuming, furthermore, that there is no change in the cost of living, what would be our estimate for the expenditures of your Department for the biennium ten years hence, or 1937 to 1939?

The only way I have of even roughly giving you a figure resolves itself into a percentage increase calculated on the basis of the previous figures submitted. The costs of maintenance of our several institutions, including repairs and replacements, as stated for the period 1931-33 as contrasted with 1933-35, showed an increase of 14 per cent, and using that figure I submit the following—

Estimate for Biennium 1937-39.

Maintenance, repairs and replacements	$23,700,000
New construction	2,000,000
Mothers' Assistance Fund	4,500,000
Appropriations to private charity	6,000,000
Department administration	550,000
Total	$36,750,000

[1] The analysis referred to was published in the 1925 Report of the Pennsylvania Tax Commission, page 47 to 52. See also the letter from the Secretary of Welfare on page 132 of the same report.

I am, as you know, firmly convinced that if county and State officials, who are responsible for the chief expenditures in the social welfare field, would adopt an aggressive policy for the prevention of social disorders, the cost of expenditures in these fields could be enormously reduced; and if this Department, dominated by such policy, were to be given whole-hearted backing by the political powers that be, as well as by business interests and social economists, the appropriations such as I have indicated could be materially held down. The unfortunate part of it is that a program such as we stand for seems to the political powers like a "pipe dream," and they are unwilling to try it out consistently over a period of years.

Third you ask: With your experience, are there any changes in existing legislation which you feel should be made, which would add to the expense of the program of the State in your Department? In other words, may an expansion of the program in your Department be reasonably anticipated, and if so, along what lines and at what costs?

You have asked a question which it is difficult for me to answer. At present, the per-capita, per-week allowance on the part of the State for the care of patients in mental hospitals is only $3.00 per week, which, combined with the county's payment, amounts to $6.00 for the care of a patient. In view of the fact that to give active therapeutic care to mental patients, with the idea of cure, involves an expenditure certainly not less than $3.00 per day, it is in my judgment desirable that the present law, which is a temporary one, should be amended to increase the weekly allowance, and certainly to $4.00 per week for State and country, or a total of $8.00 per week. In the end, this increased expenditure would undoubtedly result in a diminished gross expenditure, since more cures would be effected and more patients either discharged or paroled from the institutions.

As it is now, our institutional superintendents have a very strenuous time in administering the institutions on the modern scientific basis of cure, and I should like to see them relieved of the need of such exhausting economies, and with minds set free to do more aggressive curative and scientific work.

My answer then appears to be: Yes, legislation is needed which will increase our expenditures at present, with an attainable end in sight of ultimately reducing our expenditures.

If the per-capita, per week allowance to the mental hospitals were to be increased even to the modest sum of $4.00 per week, that would increase the State expenditure by nearly $3,000,000 a year in 1933-35, or a total for the maintenance of the insane in State and county institutions of $9,900,000, roughly, as contrasted with $6,900,000 as at present estimated.

As now financed, our mental hospitals and schools for the feeble-minded, as well as our prisons, are not able to do the research work which ultimately would reduce the costs of operation, because they lack available information which can be used for the cure of the patients.

The same would hold good for our schools for the feeble-minded. They should have an increase of about 28 per cent in their cost of maintenance. They are now forced to function on about $225 per capita per year, while $325 is deemed necessary for such institutions as Elwyn, which are not State-owned.

If such an increase were made effective, it would increase our costs of operation in 1933-35 by $1,099,000, or a total of $5,024,000 for the institutions for the feeble-minded, and it would scale up the maintenance costs in that group throughout the period by about 28 per cent.

In regard to the work of the Department of Welfare itself, I feel that very little additional law is necessary, but more appropriation is necessary in order to provide more field workers in our several fields if we are to get the best possible results.

It is our opinion, noting the splendid economies that are being made by the business administration at the Norristown State Hospital, that considerable saving in administration is possible in power plants, food administration and clothing, and with the demonstration which will be well worked out in the next year at Norristown, we shall have precedents established which will stimulate all of our other institutions to greater efficiency. The economy, however, on the business side merely makes it possible to divert that money into professional channels which is the thing we are driving at all time in our administration.

I do not know whether your study is going into the county situation as it relates to taxes. If it is, we have a great deal which we would like to say to you in regard to the enormous wastage of public funds in the old-style administration of almshouses and outdoor relief. Pennsylvania in ten years has collected over $100,000,000 in poor taxes, and the results from the expenditure do not seem to justify the outlay.

To summarize then, the legislation needed in our Department chiefly relates to more adequate appropriations to make possible real professional work—curative, palliative and preventive. It is impossible to give an accurate estimate of what the increased costs would amount to. Roughly, a 20 per cent increase in the maintenance costs of the institutions including all varieties; or 30 per cent in the mental health field alone.

Fourth, your letter states: It has been suggested that certain revenues, as for instance the income from inheritance taxes, be segregated for capital improvements, so that there may be always a constant fund for new buildings and such other capital expenditures as the nature of the work may require. If this plan could be worked out satisfactorily, what, in your judgment, would be an adequate annual fund for capital expenditures in your Department?

My answer will have to be predicated upon the assumption that no bond issue is to be effected to bring our buildings up-to-date. If then, we are to bring ourselves up-to-date, including new construction on old institutions, new construction on new institutions, repairs and replacements, and the correction of all the safety hazards previously mentioned, we should require not less than $6,200,000 per year or $12,400,000 per biennium for ten years. My figures take the capital outlay in my original letter of $49,790,000, my repairs and replacements for ten years of $9,785,760, and $2,500,000 for the correction of hazards to life and property.

These figures, I want it clearly understood, do not represent expenditures for frills of any sort. They will merely provide the State of Pennsylvania with a sufficient number of institutions in which to properly classify their different types of dependents; they will make those institutions safe from fire and sanitary menaces; they will keep up with the ravages of time and the elements; and they will provide decent housing for the professional and domestic staff of the institutions, all of which are now conspicuously lacking.

I should be glad to discuss the matter with you at any time.

Very truly yours,

ELLEN C. POTTER, M. D.,
Secretary of Welfare.

COST OF COLLECTION OF STATE TAXES.

Commonwealth of Pennsylvania
Office of
Auditor General

Harrisburg, December 2, 1926.

111 South Fifteenth Street,
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

My dear Mr. Edmonds:

Replying to yours of November twenty-third, and in conformity with my promise of November twenty-fourth, I am giving you the cost of collection of the various State taxes:

1. Corporation Taxes.

This includes anthracite coal tax, bonus on charters, capital stock, corporation gross receipts, and coporate loans. It also includes bank stock, municipal and boough loans and other small taxes collected. We have very carefully estimated the cost of collections for the fiscal year ending May 31, 1926, and find the same to be .007128. This includes delinquent collections and every other part of the work, both in the Auditor General's Department and the State Treasurer's Department.

2. Mercantile Licenses.

This includes all licenses by the mercantile appraisers. The cost of collection is .077. For your information, would say that Allegheny County has one system, Philadelphia another, and the sixty-five counties another system of collecting the taxes . In Allegheny County it costs .0767. In Philadelphia .091. In the other sixty-five counties .0695. In the sixty-five counties, in the cost is included newspaper advirtising which amounts to approximately two-thirds of one per cent. As you understand, the general plan of these collections calls for machinery in each one of the sixty-seven counties.

3. Inheritance Taxes.

The calculation is made for the calendar year 1925. The average in all of the counties is .0599. A further division shows that in Philadelphia the cost is 0441. In Allegheny County it is .0592. In the other sixty-five counties it is .0662. As you understand, there are sixty-seven separate machines set up for the collection of these taxes. The commissions in 1925 amounted to $221,248.69.

4. Gasoline Tax.

The cost in 1925 was .0067. This includes the cost in both the Auditor General's and Treasury Departments, and also the cost of our delinquent departments in the various pats of the State.

5. Miscellaneous Taxes.

There are a number of miscellaneous taxes, as you know, collected by the Auditor General's Department, but they are collected by the machinery set up for the collection of the corporation taxes and mercantile taxes enumerated above. In this item would be interest on bank deposits, etc.

6. Motor License Fees.

These funds are not collected by the Auditor General's Department, but, of course, we audit the same. It probably will be of interest to you to know the cost of these collections. For the calendar year 1925 the receipts, including motor license, registration, operators' licenses, motor law fines, etc., amounted to $21,790,192. It cost in salaries, office equipment, printing, postage, etc., to collect these taxes $1,897,754. This makes the cost of collection .087. For your information, would say we included in the above as the salary and expense of the Highway Motor Patrol, as follows:

Salaries	$247,457
Expenses	154,758
Equipment rentals	43,510
Total	445,725

All the other items of expense are used directly in the collecting of this revenue. The Highway Patrol, however, collects fines and conducts the examination for operators licenses. The Highway Department is of the opinion that is a proper expense to be charged against the collection of motor license registration fees. I must admit that I was very much suprised at the large cost of these collections. You will note that it is even higher than the cost of collection of taxes where a separate machine for collecting is set up in each one of the sixty-seven counties. In addition, it should be borne in mind that in the taxes set up in the above paragraphs, the same must be levied and set out by the taxing agencies. In the motor license registration fees it is all fixed by law and in addition it is a cash transaction there being no delinquent, except bad cheques.

If there is any further information that we can give you kindly let us know.

Very sincerely,

EDWARD MARTIN.

Commonwealth of Pennsylvania
Office of
Auditor General

Harrisburg, December 7, 1926.

11 South Ffteenth Street,
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

My dear Mr. Edmonds:

In reply to your letter of December 3, the total receipts assigned to the Corporation Bureau for the year ending May 31, 1926, amountel to $42, 496,002.00, which represented the receipts derived from corporation taxes, general fund interest, private bankers gross receipts, bank stock, borough loans, building and loan stock, county loans, income, notary public gross receipts and school loans taxes; also the annuity paid by a railroad company in northern Pennsylvania.

The total expenses assigned to the Corporation Bureau, $302,919.86, included not only the expenses of the employes of the Corporation Bureau of this Department and the Corporation Bureau of the Treasury Department which could properly be charged to the Corporation Bureau. As outlined in my letter of December 2, the cost ratio was 007128.

The net amount of mercantile and other licenses collected by the county treasurers was $3,933,634.09, of which $827,769.77 was received from Allegheny County; $1,054,922.14 from Allegheny County; $1,054,922.14 from Philadelphia County and $2,050,942.18 from the remaining sixty-five counties. The cost of collecting the licenses were as follows:

Allegheny County	$67,624.75
Philadelphia County	106,263.01
Remaining 65 Counties	153,382.33

The gross amount of license fees would be the total of the net license fees collected, plus the expenses. It was upon these totals that the percentages were based.

The total gross inheritance taxes collected for the year 1925 was $12,934,209.07. Of this amount, $4,552,627.08 was collected from Philadelphia County; $2,091,493.79 from Allegheny County, and $6,290,088.20 from the remaining counties.

The total costs of collection of these taxes were $774,729.01, of which $201,041.62 was spent in Philadelphia County; $159,293.02 in Allegheny County and $414,394.37 in the remaining counties. These costs consisted of commissions, attorneys' fees, clerk hire, appraisers, investigators and miscellaneous items.

The total amount of gasoline tax collected during the calendar year, 1925, was $10,574,413.70. The expenses assigned to the collection of this tax were $71,354,51, which consisted of office salaries, investigators, traveling expenses and proportionate costs of Philadelphia and Pittsburgh offices.

Should you desire any additional information that I can give, kindly let me know.

Very truly yours,

EDWARD MARTIN.

REAL ESTATE ASSESSMENTS, TAXES AND INCOME.

The Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture has published a special bulletin containing (1) a study of "Rural taxation in Pennsylvania," by Prof, F. P. Weaver, and (2) a detailed series of estimates by Clyde L. King of the "Wealth, income and State taxes paid by various groups of businesses in the State." Both of these studies are exceedingly interesting and valuable, and will be found distinctly helpful in supplementing the data collected by the Tax Commission. Below we give abstracts of certain statistical data from the above bulletin, insofar as it relates to the assessment and taxation of real estate.

The following table shows the wide variations that exist in assessing property for taxation both in the rural and urban sections of each county that was specially studied. In Lebanon County, for instance, the highest piece of urban proprety was assessed at 133 per cent of its actual sales value, while the lowest piece of property was assessed at only 9 per cent of full market value. Many other similar cases could be cited in other parts of the State, which clearly point to the necessity for reform in methods of assessment.

[1] Only one borough; "highest" and "lowest" refer to wards.

In order to show the relative burden for taxes on farm and city property in relation to net income, a study was made of the income derived from different classes of property in the same counties as before. Both gross income and net income before taxes were obtained for a considerable number of pieces of property in each county, and the relation between taxes and gross income and between net income and taxes was calculated. The conclusion drawn from this study, as appears from the figures in the following table, was that a larger portion of income was consumed by taxes on farm property than on town property.

[2] Minus 033 before average taxes of $117 were paid.

It is important to compare not only the weight of taxation which rests upon individual pieces of property, but also the burden which rests upon agriculture or other industries as a whole. With this in view, the following compilation was made by the Department of Agriculture, which shows for each county and for the State as a whole the proportion of total taxes paid by agriculture and also by mining property.

COMPARISON OF TAXES PAID BY AGRICULTURE AND MINING WITH ALL PROPERTY TAXES PAID IN EACH COUNTY OF PENNSYLVANIA: 1925.

[3]Not including Philadelphia County, which is tabulated with the City of Philadelphia.

[4]Including value of personal property taxable for county purposes at 4 mills. This amounts to $1,419,873,599 outside of Philadelphia, and to $790,341,889 in Philadelphia.

[5]Out of this amount there was appropriated for the support of the poor a total of $4,918,014, of which $2,575,295 was appropriated in Philadelphia. These poor appropriations represent part of the taxes levied by the counties and by the City of Philadelphia for general purposes, and are exclusive of the taxes levied by poor districts expressly for poor purposes. The total of poor appropriations and of taxes levied by poor districts was $10,410,645 for the entire State, and of this $2,757,736 was in Philadelphia.

EXHIBIT J.

RELATIVE TAX BURDENS OF PENNSYLVANIA CORPORATIONS.

When the Pennsylvania Tax Commission first undertook to investigate the tax problem of the State, it was realized that, because of the various special taxes imposed on some businesses and not on others, together with the exemptions that were granted to certain kinds of business, the tax burden in Pennsylvania was in all likelihood not distributed as equitably as it should be. Definite data, however, were almost entirely lacking to show which classes of corporations were overburdened, and the extent to which they were contributing more than a just share toward the support of State and local government.

With a view to providing a body of facts upon which to base its conclusions, the Commision authorized its statistician to make a thorough study of the corporation tax reports in the Auditor General's Department, and to prepare in summary form an analysis of what these reports disclose. This investigation, which involved the examination of all of the 25,000 or more captal stock reports filed by domestic corporations for the year 1924, has been completed and the results are given herewith.

The general plan of procedure was to obtain from each report the following items:

1. Kind of business in which engaged.
2. State and local taxes paid in 1924.
3. Federal taxes paid in 1924.
4. Capital invested.
5. Gross earnings.
6. Net income after taxes and before dividends.
7. Principal items in general balance sheet.
8. Tangible property in Pennsylvania.
9. Tangible property outside Pennsylvania.
10. Taxable value of capital stock.

Each corporation was classified under one of the 26 kinds of corporations shown in the tables below. These classifications were not determined from the classification printed on each report blank, but from a careful examination of the entire report, and in some cases from data secured from other sources.

In order to have the results of the study reflect the tax situation in Pennsylvania as nearly as possible, all foreign corporations were excluded and also domestic corporations which had more than half of their tangible property located outside Pennsylvania. In addition, corporations of the first class—i. e., not conducted for profit—were excluded, as well as corporations which failed to report either taxes and income or taxes and capital. A few corporations had to be omitted because they lumped taxes and expenditures in a single item or combined State and local taxes with Federal taxes.

After these necessary omissions were made, there remained nearly 15,000 corporations which could be included in the final summaries. While this does not represent a complete analysis of every corporation in the State, it does provide a very large and representative sample, which clearly indicates the relative position of the different classes of business. Added confidence in the essential validity of the figures is given by the fact that summaries of much smaller numbers of corporations, which were made from time to time as the work progressed, showed a high degree of consistency among themselves, thus indicating that, despite any shortcomings of the data, there are certain central tendencies which remain the same whether the entire number of corporations or only a small fraction of them is considered.

The two most commonly accepted measures of taxpaying ability are property and income. In this study, therefore, the relatives burden of taxation upon Pennsylvania corporations has been determined by comparing the taxes paid by corporations first with their capital and second with their net income.

Capital, as here used, corresponds closely to "net worth," and represents in the majority of cases total assets at fair value less encumbrances. The figures here given for capital would therefore frequently be considerably lower than if capital were taken to mean total assets and good-will, total wealth, or total capitalized earning power. Net income, as it is reported to the Auditor General, is net income after deduction of taxes and before distribution of dividends. Since it is desirable to know what proportion of net income prior to all tax payments is later absorbed by taxes, the total of Federal, State and local taxes has been added to net income as reported in order to obtain net income before taxes.

Some explantion is necessary with regard to State and local taxes. It should be borne in mind that in the reports filed with the Auditor General there is no separation between taxes paid to the State and to its local subdivisions. In the second place, taxes paid in Pennsylvania are not distinguished from those paid in other States. The first of these observations present no difficulties, since it is the total burden of State and local taxation, or Federal, State and local taxes, which is of real significance in comparing relative tax burdens. The second point, however, raises a serious question: To what extent do the figures presented here represent taxes paid to other States and to municipal governments outside Pennsylvania? If any large proportion of taxes is paid to other States and their municipalities by the corporations included in this study, then the results, while technically correct as far as the total burden of taxation upon these particular corporations is concerned, would shed little light upon how burdensome or otherwise the taxes imposed by Pennsylvania and its local governments are.

This question cannot be answered with absolute precision, but several facts make it certain that these figures include only a small proportion of State and local taxes paid outside Pennsylvania. In the first place, as pointed out above, only corporations chartered in Pennsylvania are included. Since the bonus on corporate charters is very high in Pennsylvania as compared with neighboring States, this means that a corporation is not likely to incorporate in Pennsylvania unless it intends to carry on the major part, or at least a considerable part, of its business within the State. Exceptions may be found to this rule, but the general proposition nevertheless stands.

In the second place, where corporations chartered in Pennsylvania were found to have the major part of their tangible property located outside Pennsylvania, these corporations have been omitted from this study. It would logically follow, therefore, that the corporations shown in the following tables should have a high percentage of their tangible property located in Pennsylvania. This is borne out by the actual figures reported to the Auditor General, which show that, for the 13,562 corporations included in the first of the accompanying tables, 89.47 per cent of the tangible property of the manufacturing group was located in Pennsylvania and only 10.53 per cent was located elsewhere. For mercantile corporations the proportion was 93.24 per cent in Pennsylvania and 6.76 per cent outside. Similar results were found in each of the other groups of corporations, while the figures for the entire group of 13,562 corporations showed that they had 90.14 per cent of their tangible property in Pennsylvania and only 9.86 per cent in other States. Since these corporations could not be taxed to any appreciable extent on intangible property located outside Pennsylvania, and since their tangible property subject to taxation in other States is only ten per cent of all their tangible property, it may safely be concluded that the State and local figures here presented are indicative of the burden of taxes imposed by Pennsylvania and that for the purposes of this study the small amounts of taxes paid by these corporations in other States may be neglected.

Attention is called in the body of this report to the general results of this study, and the figures may now be left to speak for themselves. The reader is therefore referred to the tables which follow on pages 123 and 124, and to the chart which appears on page 28.

NOTE.—The above table shows the present schedule of motor truck fees and several alternative proposals for revised rates. In the present schedule, the rate for trucks with solid tires is 25 per cent greater than for trucks with pneumatic tires except in class Z, where the differential is greater. In Proposals A, B, and C, the differential has been increased to 50 per cent. The estimated average fees and estimated total fees are based on data for 1925 furnished to the Pennsylvania Tax Commission by the Highway Department. The estimates assume that the number of trucks in each class remains the same as in 1925.

Proposal B, shown in heavy type, is recommended by the Pennsylvania Tax Commission for adoption in place of the present schedule of fees. (See discussion on page 41.)

EXHIBIT M.

GAINS AND LOSSES IN REVENUE UNDER CHANGES PROPOSED.

In Chapter II of this report the Commission has presented its recommendations for immediate changes in the tax laws of the Commonwealth, and some of these changes involve either loss or gain in the amount of revenue that would be collected. The first recommendation, the creation of a permanent State Tax Commission to have charge of the collection of all inheritance and mercantile license taxes, would undoubtedly, if efficiently managed, save the citizens of the Commonwealth a large sum in reduced collection costs, and at the same time would bring in substantially more revenue. There is no way of estimating precisely how great the increased yield under a system of central collection would be, but it seems conservative to anticipate that the increase would be at least ten per cent of present collections. This would mean an additional $1,500,000 annually from inheritance and $350,000 from mercantile licenses.

The principal changes, from the standpoint of their effect upon State revenue, relate to the transfer inheritance tax. The Commission recommends that inheritances passing between brother and sister shall be taxed at five per cent, instead of ten per cent, and that legacies to charity shall likewise be reduced to five per cent. A further recommendation is that a deduction of $5,000 be allowed from all estates. The Commission has gone with considerable care into the amount of loss that these changes would entail, and after studying all the data which were available in the Auditor General's Department feels safe in concluding that the total loss from the reduction in rate and from the deduction of $5,000 would be in the neighborhood of $4,000,000 annually. As an offset to this reduction, there would be the $1,500,000 increase which would follow the introduction of an efficient system of central collection, or a net reduction of some $2,500,000 per year.

The further recommendation of the Commission that advantage be taken of the provision in the Federal Estate Tax of 1926, which allows a deduction up to 80 per cent of the amount of State taxes actually imposed and paid, would increase the revenues of the Commonwealth by several million dollars a year. No account, however, is taken of this provision in the present estimates, because of the probability that such additional revenue would be more or less of a temporary nature, and also because there is some doubt whether the proposed law would be constitutional in Pennsylvania.

The other important changes advocated by the Commission are the reduction of the bonus on corporation charters from one-third to one-tenth of one per cent and the repeal of the loans tax on the obligations of Pennsylvania municipalities. These changes would result in a loss of revenue of $1,200,000 and $1,800,000 per year, respectively. On the other hand, the proposed tax on the net income of private bankers and brokers is estimated to bring in at least $250,000 additional revenue per year.

The immediate changes may therefore be summarized as follows:

Items	Annual Gain	Annual Loss
Central collection:
Inheritance tax	$1,500,000	.....
Mercantile licenses	350,000	.....
Inheritance tax reduced and deduction of $5,000 allowed	.....	$4,000,000
Bonus on charters reduced to one-tenth of one per cent	.....	1,200,000
Municipal loans tax repealed	.....	1,800,000
Net income tax on private bankers and brokers	250,000	.....
Total	2,100,000	7,000,000
Net loss in revenue	.....	4,900,000

The two alternative proposals for the future, outlined in Chapter III, are somewhat different in their fiscal results and hence they will be treated separately. The first proposal repeals the capital stock tax, mercantile license tax, corporate loans tax, and anthracite coal tax, and substitutes in their place a net profits tax on all business, incorporated and unincorporated, except public utilities, banking and insurance, at such a rate as will yield to requisite revenue. A deduction of the first $1,000 of net profits is granted to each taxable.

An examination of the corporate income tax returns to the Federal Government for the last three years for which statistics are available in detail gives the following results for corporations in Pennsylvania:

Year	Net income of all corporations	Net income excluding public utilities banking, etc.
1922	$683,697,493	$515,593,428
1923	902,478,647	675,779,229
Average	772,234,809	568,753,103

It is evident from the foregoing figures that a net profits tax of four per cent would have yieded, after making allowance for a deduction of $1,000, about $21,750,000 per year from incorporated business, excluding public utilities, banking and insurance. The available data indicate that unincorporated business is somewhat more than half as large in the aggregate as incorporated business. Using the figure of 50 per cent, however, in order to be conservative, we obtain a total estimate from the proposed net profits tax on all kinds of business of $32,625,000 per year. The losses in revenue that would result from the other changes proposed may readily be estimated from the latest reports of the Auditor General, and altogether they give us the following results.

Estimate of Annual Gains and Losses from Proposal 1.

Items	Gains	Losses
Enact a net profits tax on all business, except public utilities, banking and insurance, at the rate of 4 per cent	$32,600,000	.....
Repeal:
Capital stock tax	.....	$17,500,000
Mercantile license tax	.....	3,600,000
Corporate loans tax	.....	4,400,000
Anthracite coal tax	.....	6,000,000
Total	32,600,000	31,500,000
Net gain in revenue	1,100,000	.....

The second proposal would repeal the anthracite coal tax, and the mercantile license tax so far as it applies to corporations, would reduce the capital stock tax to four mills, and would impose a net profits tax of two per cent or less upon corporations, limited partnerships and associations, with the exception of public utilities, which would continue to be taxed as at present. The results of this program would be about as follows:

Estimate of Annual Gains and Losses from Proposal II.

Items	Gains	Losses
Enact a net profits tax on all corporations, limited partnerships and associations, except public utilities, insurance and banking, at the rate of 2 per cent	$13,600,000	.....
Reduce capital stock tax to 4 mills	.....	$3,200,000
Repeal:
Mercantile license tax on corporations	.....	1,800,000
Anthracite coal tax	.....	6,000,000
Net gain in revenue	2,600,000	.....

It will be noticed that the rates in both of the above proposals have been fixed at such points as to yield only small additional amounts of revenue. If the needs of the State require increases beyond what may be expected from the growth in population, wealth and income, such additional revenues could be obtained by increasing slightly the rates of tax proposed. When the system of the profits tax is approved, however, and the rate determined, the rate should not be changed except when absolutely necessary, as stability in the rates of taxation is an essential to proper business development.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION APPOINTED TO STUDY AND REVISE THE STATUTES OF PENNSYLVANIA RELATING TO CHILDREN.

1525 Locust Street, Philadelphia

To Honorable Thomas Bluett, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
General Assembly, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania.

Sir: We have the honor to transmit herewith the report of this Commission appointed to study and revise the statutes of Pennsylvania relating to children.

The recommendations of the Commission for legislation for the control of child placement, for the repeal of the indenture acts, for the licensing of maternity homes anl hospitals, for changes in the jurisdiction and powers of the juvenile court, and for clarifying jurisdiction in adoption cases are presented in the body of the report.

This document is now in course of publication. Copies will be distributed to the members of the Legislature when it comes from the press.

Just prior to the meeting of the General Assembly each member was sent copies of two publications by this Commission. "The Extent of Child Dependency and Delinquency in Seven Pennsylvania Counties" is a summary of a detailed study made by the U. S. Children's Bureau of the child welfare conditions and resources of these seven counties. The full study is due from the U. S. Government Printing Office by April of this year and will be distributed to the Senators and Representatives. The other publication, "The Legal Foundations of the Jurisdiction, Powers, Organization and Procedure of the Courts of Pennsylvania in their Handling of Cases of Juvenile Offenders and of Dependent and Neglected Children," was prepared and printed by this Commission. Both of these documents should be considered as parts of the present report.

As your Commission has examined further into the situation of child welfare laws and their operation in Pennsylvania it has come to the conclusion that the statement in the letter transmitting its first report, to the effect that the completion of its task would require two more years, was unduly optimistic. In this field of law the creation of public understanding of principles and the development of administrative machinery for carrying them into operation are large conditioning factors. Effective legislation must be kept in step with them. Your Commission has found itself obliged to initiate and participate in many activities for the crystallization of opinion of that nature. Obviously the task of harmonizing public opinion, administrative machinery and actual technical legal expression of these ideas for such a state as Pennsylvania is a slow and laborious process. Your Commission asks, therefore, that it be continued for a further period of two year to work on the legal phases of the development of better provision for the care of child offenders and of children thrown on public or private charity for support.

Second Report to The General Assembly of The Commission Appointed to Study And Revise The Statutes Relating to Dependent, Neglected Incorrigible and Delinquent Children

The Program of the Children's Commission

In its first report transmitted in 1925 to your honorable bodies, the Children's Commission presented three kinds of material:

1. A manual of the laws then on the statute books. These sections from the statutes had been compiled and arranged according to subjects by the Legislative Reference Bureau. They were indexed and published by this Commission.

2. The drafts of two proposed measures. One of these repealed nine acts or parts of acts, the oldest of which dated from 1855, relating to procedure in adoptions and provided for a new procedure aimed to correct the grave abuses which your Commission had found to exist. The other measure provided for a more efficient system in the licensing of infant boarding houses. It replaced three existing laws, the earliest of which had been passed in 1885. It was a matter of great encouragement to your Commission that both of these measures were enacted into law almost verbatim by the General Assembly.

3. The third part of the Commission's first report consisted of two memoranda, one relating to the care of dependent children and the other to the care of delinquent children. These attempted to outline the general situation in these two fields of effort in behalf of unfortunate children and to point out the elements of confusion, waste and low standards of care. It was hoped that these memoranda would serve to indicate the program which this Commission would follow, if continued, or to provide a point of departure for any other body, official or private, which might be interested in the revision of the Statutes.

When, therefore, the Children's Commission was continued by the 1925 General Assembly, it had before it a working plan which had been presented to the Legislature and which had been printed and circulated widely throughout the state. From the complete absence of any unfavorable comment on this first report and from the uniformly cordial and co-operative treatment which it has received at the hands of public officials, social service organizations and the press, your Commission is led to believe that in the main, its announced program met with the approval of the public, and it has accordingly served as a guide for the Commission's work during this biennium.

Operation of the Measures Enacted in 1925

Before going into the work of the Commission since the 1925 meeting of the Legislature, it may be well to review for a moment the results, in so far as they have been learned, of the two measures recommended to your bodies by this Commission and passed by you.

The Adoption Act

While your Commission has not been able to carry on a continuous study of adoptions decreed in Pennsylvania such as would enable it to make exact comparisons between the practices adopted after the passage of this act with those prevailing before, yet it has been able to make some observations and collect some information regarding the number of adoptions decreed in the year 1926.

In Philadelphia County the number of adoptions since January 1, 1919 have been as follows:

1920	173
1921	178
1922	187
1923	163
1924	225
First half of 1925	90
Secod half of 1925	39
1926	145

Figures from some of the other populous counties show similar reductions. Illustrations are as follows:

	Average per year for 1922-1923	1926
Luzerne County	67	60
Berks County	29	32
Westmoreland County	38	20
Cambria County	48	34
Washington County	25	30
Fayette County	22	20
Erie County	65	38
Blair County	33	27
Armstrong County	10	10
Huntingdon County	2	3
Clarion County	5	2

Having found evidence of so many questionable adoptions prior to the passage of this law and now finding a reduction in numbers, your Commission is led to believe that there has been a systematic elimination of those which cannot bear the closer scrutiny which the new Act makes mandatory.

While in the main the adoption act of 1925 seems to have gone into operation with a minimum of confusion, there have arisen somewhat informally two or three questions which to your Commission appear a little far fetched, in regard to residence of the petitioners and the child, and in regard to jurisdiction. In order, however, that there shall not be the slightest shadow of doubt in regard to these questions, your Commission offers the following supplemental act on this subject.

AN ACT

Providing that jurisdiction to decree adoptions shall be exclusively in the Orphans' Court of the County where the petitioner permanently resides.

Be it enacted, etc. That jurisdiction to decree adoptions shall be exclusively in the Orphans' Court of the County in which the petitioner for the adoption permanently resides and all petitions for adoption shall be presented only to said court.

The Act Relating to Infant Boarding Houses

Under the new act which requires a state license for every person other than a relative who takes two or more children under the age of three years to board, the Department of Welfare issued between October 1, 1925 and December 31, 1926, 95 licenses and declined 28 applications for licenses.

Prosecutions under the new act were instituted in Philadelphia County in two cases of which the Children's Commission has records. In both instances the operators were unlicensed and were taking many more babies than they could properly care for. The sinister conditions of child neglect characteristic of baby farms were unmistakably present. In one instance the operator was a deliberate and persistent violator who appeared to enjoy the protection of a prosperous undertaker. After she had evaded and defied authority for several months it was found necessary to sentence her to jail for thirty days. The other violation was due to the sheer ignorance of the operator. She was indicted by the grand jury, plead guilty at her trial and was fined fifty dollars. Her house was closed and she returned to the remote village in a neighboring state from which she had come. Of the ten children removed three were less than three years old. The operator claimed that she did not know the names of some of these children.

From one of the smaller cities in the eastern section of the state it was reported to the Commission that for years a baby farm run by a Mrs. X— had been notoriously bad. Mrs. X was an elderly women who kept in her frame house of seven rooms from fifteen to twenty-five children ranging in age from a few weeks to seven and eight years old. Some weeks before the new law went into effect she was found to have in her custody seventeen children. Ten more, of whom six were babies of one year or less, were expected to arrive the next day. She had no help of any kind to assist her in the household work or the care of the children. There was every reason to believe that the long standing reports of irregular and improper feeding, children not permitted to have sunshine, children able to walk but kept in bed both day and night and the prevalence of diseases due to bad feeding and exposure to contagion, were founded on fact.

As soon as the new law became operative the local health officer visited the house, found that Mrs. X. could not comply with the rules and regulations of the State Welfare Department and advised her to close the place. This she did. There were about twenty children in her house at that time. Mrs. X. seemed to know very little about the parents of any of these children. In several cases she did not even know the names of the children. The health authorities and the police undertook to locate the parents who were compelled to remove and provide for their children.

Your Commission is of the opinion that this act should continue in operation for a few more years before changes should be undertaken. Further experience and observation may then indicate (1) whether a license should be required of a person not a relative, who boards even one child under the age of twelve, as is the case in New York, and (2) whether such a measure could be thoroughly administered in Pennsylvania.

Information and Educational Services

As a result of the publication of the Commission's first report including the Manual of General Statutes Relating to Children, your Commission has received many appeals to furnish information, and to participate in meetings and conferences at which these subjects were under discussion. In so far as it could, your Commission, both through its members and its staff, has responded to these requests. It is thought that it has thereby helped to promote better understanding of these affairs, to clarify the issues involved in some of these situations, to concert public opinion on the proper remedial measures and to pave the way for necessary changes in legislation.

Preparations for Report to the General Assembly Meeting in 1927

In the 1925 report to the General Assembly it was recorded that at the request of this Commission, the United States Children's Bureau was making a survey of the child welfare conditions and resources in seven counties typical of the state outside the great metropolitan centers. The field work for that survey was completed early in the spring of 1925; the statistical material was tabulated and in the early summer of 1925 the complete set of reports and statistical tables was turned over to this Commission with the understanding that its executive secretary would prepare the complete report which would serve both as the official report of the United States Children's Bureau and as a working basis of facts for this Commission. That report, the most exhaustive examination of its kind ever made either in this state by any agency or by the United States Children's Bureau in any other state, is now in course of publication by the United States Printing Office. It is a veritable mine of information regarding the practices and the operation of the law in these communities. The ways in which the people of these counties have organized to help children handicapped in various ways have been described in full. A very brief summary of the findings of this study has been printed by the United States Children's Bureau and widely circulated throughout the state under the title of "The Extent of Child Dependency and Delinquency in Seven Pennsylvania Counties".

With its own staff the Commission has gathered information regarding the cases of dependent children in the juvenile courts of Philadelphia and Allegheny Counties and regarding the cases of child offenders in the Morals Court in Pittsburgh.

It has also prepared, published and circulated a 177 page pamphlet setting forth "The Legal Foundations of the Jurisdiction, Powers, Organization and procedure of the Court of Pennsylvania in their handling of Cases of Juvenile Offenders and of Dependent and Neglected Children."

All of this and other material gathered by your Commission will be further explained and drawn upon later in this report as the measures recommended for passage are presented and explained.

Measures Recommended to the 1927 General Assembly

In its report to the 1925 session of the General Assembly your Commission pointed out that in the care of dependent and delinquent children there were many practices which were greatly in need of attention and study. It has been from these that the selection of matters to bring to your attention at this session, has been made. They are as follows:

1. An act repealing the laws relating to the indenture or binding out of children.
2. Two acts for the control of child placement.
3. An act for the licensing of maternity homes and hospitals.
4. An act to amend the juvenile court act, as it now exists, in such a way as to take dependent children out of the court's jurisdiction, and to make other changes designed to improve the service of the court in its primary function, i. e. the care of child offenders.

In accordance with the instructions issued to this Commission (1) to make a full report and give concise statements of the reasons for each recommendation to the General Assembly, the draft of each of these measures will be introduced by an explanatory section.

An Act Repealing the Indenture Laws

The principal reasons for the recommendation that the indenture laws be repealed are as follows:

1. To complete a process, begun in 1907, of clearing from the statute books legislation providing for this obsolete form of child placement.
2. To remove from the field of law in Pennsylvania a legal relationship which presupposes that a child will return before he reaches his majority, the value of his care and maintenance in his earlier years.
3. Indenture as a form of child placement over-emphasizes, on account of its historical background, the feature of the child's work but provideds no form of guarantee that the child will receive any special benefit in return. As now practiced the indenture of a child to the age of eighteen or twenty-one virtually makes a gift of his services and any wages he may earn to his "master" in return for his maintenance, since trade education is no longer taught in the household.
4. It both under-emphasizes the feature of supervision by those responsible for a child's placement and fails to reckon with the many needs of dependent children for special efforts to overcome the physical and mental handicaps with which so many are afflicted.
5. Indenture has been superceded in theory and in practice by other kinds of arrangements for securing foster home care for the children who need it.

The Indenture Laws of Pennsylvania

Indenture as a legal form of relationship between a child and a foster parent was brought into Pennsylvania by the English colonists. References to the binding out of children go back at least as far as 1698.(1) The first general act relating to the duties of directors of the poor empowered them to bind out what were then called pauper children. This was passed in 1705-1706. (2)

[1] Heffner: History of Poor Relief Legislation in Pennsylvania, 1682-1913, Cleona, Pa. 1913, Cleona, Pa. 1913, p. 37.
[2] Ibid. p. 45.

In 1713 the Orphans' Court in the respective counties was given power to bind out minors to trades or husbandry or such other employments as were "thought fit."

Subsequently in the poor relief legislation of 1771, 1798, 1836, 1876 and in fact, in every county and district poor relief act there is provision that the directors may bind out children of poor parents who become chargeable. (1)

It is noteworthy, however, that the act of 1883 which prohibted the keeping of children in the almshouses adopts the words "place" children instead of the old form. In the Poor Relief Act of 1925 this language is retained and confers authority on the directors to make placements.

General legislation relating solely to indenture was passed in 1770, 1834, 1878 and 1899. (2)

Indenture by Private Societies

In Pennsylvania the power of indenturing children resides not only in parents, guardians and poor relief officers but, prior to 1874 was conferred by the Legislature upon several private institutions. An examination of Price's Index to Local Legislation in Pennsylvania (3) indicates that 24 institutions for children received by legislative enactment the power to receive or to place children or indenture or to do both; nineteen of these institutions are still in existence; five have disappeared as child caring organizations.

By the act of 1878, P. L. 152, "all corporations organized for the purpose of providing homes for friendless or destitute persons or children" had power conferred upon them to bind out children received by them from the directors of the poor "when maintenance is unprovided for by their parents or guardians." This act was further elaborated in 1899 (1) when any charitable society which had maintained a child "in whole or in part," for a year was authorized under certain limitations to proceed to idenure him. Later, the juvenile court act of 1903 carried the provision private societies to which children are committed might indenture them. (2)

[2] Sec. 5, Act of April 23, 1903, P. L. 274. In another part of this report it is suggested that this section be repealed for other reasons as well as this reason.

Indenture Subject to Abuse

Evidently from the beginning legislators were conscious of possible if not actual abuses of the indenture system. In the case of wards of the Orphans' Court in the 1713 act they limited the power of the court so that it could not bind out a child (1) to persons of a religious persuasion different from himself or his parents, (2) or against the minor's own mind or inclination in so far as he was capable of judgment, (3) or to persons "not of good repute, so as others of good credit, and of the same persuasion, may or can be found."

Likewise in the poor laws there is the consciousness that under the indenture system there was grave danger that the child's labor would become the paramount consideration and his care and education would be overlooked. In 1839 after the inauguration of the public school system in the state the indentures of all children bound out as apprentices were required to contain a stipulation for three months "schooling" every year.(1) In 1855 it was provided that the poor directors were not to bind them out more than 30 miles from the almshouse and the county courts were to approve all indentures and take security for the faithful performance of the stipulation. (2) In 1876 it was provided (3) that a child could not be indentured to a farmer for a period beyond his eighteenth birthday.

In England there has been such keen appreciation of the abuses of the indenture of "parish" children that for the last several decades it could only be done under the control of the Local Government Board, and now under the Ministry of Health, (4) a highly centralized body, which issues rules specifying fully the manner in which such children are to be bound, assigned and maintained by the local authorities and inspects their work.

Important Indenture Laws Already Repealed

Your Commission found that the process of repeal of this mass of old legislation had begun in Pennsylvania twenty years ago when by the act of April 17, 1907, P. L. 93, the act of Sept. 29, 1770, 1 Sm. L. 311 was repealed outright. This had provided remedies for the misuse of the apprentice by his master or mistress or for the misconduct of the apprentice, including his absconding and had set the maximum ages at which a boy or girl might be bound.

By the Fiduciaries Act of June 7, 1917, P. L. 447, (sec. 63) the power of the Orphans' Court to bind out children was repealed.

The Modern Practice of Indenture

On account of the obsolete character of this form of child placement, and because the process of repeal was well started, it did not seem to your Commission necessary or justifiable to incur the expense of making an intensive study of the practice as it still exists.

It has never been practiced by the two large child placing societies of the state—the Pennsylvania Children's Aid Society and the Western Pennsylvania Chillren's Aid Society. Inquiries in Philadelphia and Allegheny Counties failed to bring to light any use by any person or agency of indenture as it was originally created to act.

It was found that in the seven counties in one it had been practiced up to 1922 by the poor directors; ninety-four (94) children had been indentured by them in the period from 1905 to 1924. In all cases a form of indenture which would be identified as one in use in England prior to 1630 (1) had been used. It carried the stipulation that the child was bound, if a girl to the age of eighteen or if a boy to the age of twenty-one. At the end of his term the boy usually was to receive two suits of clothes and five or ten dollars; the girls in all but one case were to receive "suitable clothing" and a similar amount of money. It carried no stipulation that the child could be removed if ill-treated.

In another county in which there is an unusually large amount of rural child labor, it was found that indenture was being practiced by a children's institution and two child placement societies. The indenture forms in use were found however to carry the stipulations that the child might be removed from the master or mistress at the discretion of the placement society.

Your Commission learned of a few other counties in which the poor law authorities occasionally bind out a child. An actual deed signed in 1917 of a boy ten days old who was indentured to a woman whose marital status and age are not disclosed, reads with the exception of the names and addresses of the parties involved, as follows:

THIS INDENTURE MADE THE 17th day of..... A. D., one thousand nine hundred and Seventeen (1917) Between Issac Lehrfeld, Joseph Dickson and Michael Donahey, DIRECTORS OF THE POOR and the HOUSE OF EMPLOYMENT for the COUNTY OF X of the one part, and Emma Smith, High Top Hill, of the other part, WITNESSETH, That the said Directors of the Poor and the House of Employment aforesaid, have put and placed and by virtue of the power and authority vested in them by an Act of the General Assembly of this State, entitled "An Act to provide for the erection of a house for the employment and support of the Poor in the County of X and for other purposes," do hereby put and place Arthur Roe an apprentice to dwell with and serve the said Emma Smith Executors or Administrators, from the day of the date hereof, for and during, and to the full end the term of twenty-one years or until he attains to the full and lawful age of twenty-one years.....next ensuing, in all lawful and reasonable service; And the said Emma Smith Executors or Administrators, during the said term, shall find and provide for the said apprentice sufficient meat, drink, apparel, washing and lodging, and all other necessaries; and shall teach or cause him to be taught the art and mystery of a trade of his own choice.....

and during said term shall give him day schooling, as State Law requires after he attains the age of fourteen years; and, when free, two complete suits of clothes, one of which to be new.....valued at from twenty-five to thirty dollars.....This Indenture not to be assignable without the consent of the Directors of the Poor and of the House of Employment as aforesaid, for the time being. In witness Whereof, The said parties to these presents have hereunto interchangeably set their Hands and Seals the day and year above written.

From such forms of agreement combined with the fact that there still remains on the statute book the Act of April 11, 1799, Sm. L. 385, which provides that if an indentured child absents himself from "the service of his master or mistress" before his term expires, he is liable to his master or mistress or "their heirs, executors or administrators" as if he had been of full age when the contract was executed, it is seen that a legal type of servitude of children still exists in theory, though, happily, the practice has largely passed away.

Indenture of Apprentice Practically Obsolete in the Industrial System.

With the possible exception of the "art, trade and mystery" of being a river pilot, the learning of a skilled trade no longer requires that the apprentice live with his master. The element of custody—so well revealed in the old couplet advising apprentices that "However things do frame, Please well that Master, but chiefly thy Dame."—is no longer an issue in trade training. It is true that there is an occasional use of apprenticeship in such training but from advice received from the United States Department of Labor and from labor leaders in Pennsylvania your Commission is of the opinion that a legal form of apprenticeship is wholly insignificant and that equally effective arrangements could be made under a form of private contract or agreement which could be signed by the apprentice, and, if he is a minor, by his parents or guardian, and the employer or master craftsman. In the case of Delaware River pilots the indenture of apprenticeship still carries some of its original meaning of conferring custody in return for training in a skilled and responsible occupation. Your Commission has learned, however, that the number of indentured boys not kinsmen to their master pilots, is very small. On account of the special character of this form of indenture, your Commission is not disposed to object, should the Commissioners of Navigation of the Delaware River, and its navigable tributaries, ask for the exemption of the Act of March 29, 1803 (P. L. 542) and its amendments from the repeal of all acts relating to the binding of minors.

Should it later appear that some legally established form of contract in apprenticeship as it is now practised in industry is necessary, your Commission believes that it should be established de novo, possibly under the general supervision of the educational authorities or the Department of Labor and Industry or both.

Indenture to the City of Philadelphia for Education in Girard College

Engraved on and growing out of the old indenture and apprenticeship system prevalent at the time of making Stephen Girard's will, have been the special acts under which the Philadelphia Board of City Trusts enters into agreements with the mothers and other custodianss of the boys admitted to Girard College. This adaptation of the indenture relationship is used to effect a very special kind of relationship. While the boy is bound to the city for a period specified in the indenture, the city is at liberty to cancel at any time.

Technically the Girard College student is indentured to the City of Philadelphia. The indenturing done by the Board of City Trusts rests on a series of special acts endowing the Board with legal powers; the Acts of March 24, 1832 (P. L. 176), of February 27, 1847 (P. L. 178), of April 20, 1853 (P. L. 623, Section 6), of June 30, 1869 (P. L. 1276), and of May 23, 1887 (P. L. 168), are cited as the enabling legislation. The last act in this series does not name the Board of City Trusts or the City of Philadelphia, but it obviously refers specifically to the Girard College indentures. The earlier acts seems to have contemplated a system by which the guardians of the poor of the district in which a prospective Girard College student was settled were, with the consent of the mother, guardian or next friend, to sign his indenture and thus to give the "mayor, aldermen and citizens of Philadelphia" their rights of custody over him. The Act of 1887 permits the mother, guardian or next friend to sign these papers without the intervention of the guardians of the poor. This act, however, is limited in its operation to the cases in which the mother, guardian or next friend binds the orphan "to any city."

The Act of 1847 confers power on the City of Philadelphia to apprentice Girard College boys to the age of twenty-one after they cease to be students at the College. It also gives the college pawers of guardianship of any property which may come to a boy while he is indentured to the college.

Your Commission believes that equally satisfactory ways of empowering the Board of City Trusts to look after the welfare of Girard College students and their property could be worked out on a legal foundation more in harmony with modern ideas and legal practices. On the other hand, it recognizes that as in the case of the river pilots, this a peculiar form of indenture resting on special acts of the Legislature. Should the exemption of Girard College indentures be regarded, however, as a justification for exempting other institutions which place children on indenture, or as a vindication of the principle of giving deeds to children, your Commission would consider it unwise to allow the Girard College acts to stand on the statute boks, unmodified.

Indenture in Other States

Before recommending the repeal of Pennsylvania's indenture acts, your Commission inquired regarding this form of law in other states. It was reported early in 1926 to be on the statute books of but eleven other states: Arkansas, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Maryland, Michigan, Nevada, Rhode Island, Wisconsin, Virginia and West Virginia. Since that time Rhode Island has taken the necessary legislative action to drop out from this list. New York, Ohio, Minnesota and Oregon have within recent years repealed their statutes on this subject. Recent inquiries in Wisconsin[1] have revealed conditions which warrant its abolition there as a device for the placement of children in foster homes.[2]

[1] See Children Indentured by the Wisconsin State Public School System, U. S. Children's Bureau Publication No. 150.
[2] An entirely new state-supervised system has been worked out in Wisconsin for apprenticeship training in industry.

It is hoped that this year Pennsylvania can join those who have cleared away this relic of the time the dependent child was regarded as proper material out of which to make a household drudge.

The Act Repealing The Laws Relating to Indenture

Your Commission offers the following act as designed to accomplish the repeal of the remaining acts relating to the binding of children.

An Act

Repealing all acts and parts of acts, general, local and special, which provide for the indenture or binding out of minors.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, That all acts and parts of acts, general, local and special which provide for the indenture or binding out of minors, are hereby repealed.

An Act for the Further Control of Child Placement

The third measure which your Commission presents provides for the further control of child placement. In its study of the adoption of children your Commission was deeply impressed with the thought that if among the relatively few candidates for adoption there could be found so much evidence of the exposure of children to hardship and unfavorable influences at the hands of unsuitable custodians, what must be the situation of the placed children with whom adoption was not an issue. Similarly among such cases of indenture in foster families as have come to the Commission's attention, there has been additional evidence of irresponsible and ill-advised placement.

Multiplicity of Placement Agencies

The first outstanding fact in Pennsylvania with regard to placement of children is the multiplicity of organizations which have assumed this function. It will be recalled from the adoption study that in Philadelphia County forty-one child caring and social agencies had taken part in 214 adoptions. Among these were a few instances of placements by poor districts but none by the juvenile courts, all of which are legally empowered to place. The study of adoptions in Allegheny and twelve other counties of the state showed that fifty-four agencies had been directly connected with 443 adoptions. In the seven counties studied by the U. S. Children's Bureau, it was found that 677 children had been placed in foster homes by twenty-four agencies or institutions. Besides this host of organizations which engage in foster home placement of children it is known that babies and small children are passed along from hand to hand through the activities of private or professional persons who feel that they are thereby performing a useful and interesting service. Occasionally a physician, a nurse, or a clergyman will feel it his duty to assist patients or parishioners in their efforts to divest themselves of or to assume parental responsibility. It is not unheard of for some persons and agencies to suggest to parents that they place their children. Your Commission has been advised of a few instances in Pennsylvania and neighboring states of persons who make child placement a kind of hobby. One of several such persons recently related how she is placing children without regard to the laws controlling the importation of dependent children in Pennsylvania and in neighboring states. On account of the somewhat clandestine nature of her activities thus far she had evaded prosecution and rather proudly claimed the distinction of the title, conferred by her friends of being a "baby bootlegger."

Number of Children Placed Out

From information collected by the State Department of Welfare it appears that there were 10,418 children in foster homes under the supervision of institutions and placement agencies on May 31, 1926. These are, however, by no means all of the placed out children in Pennsylvania. Since the placements of neither probation officers nor directors of the poor nor the casual persons engaging in placing are included in the census made by the Department of Welfare, it is obvious that the actual number of children in foster homes is probably considerably larger than the figure given above. Moreover, the total number of children in care in a year is considerably larger than the census of one day.

Illustrations of Careless Child Placing

Specific instances illustrating the results of poor placing and of an inadequate supervision of children in foster homes are so easily accumulated and can be so readily appreciated that your Commission regarded it as unnecessary to make a systematic collection of such material. The following instances picked somewhat at random from the studies which this Commission and the U. S. Children's Bureau have made in Pennsylvania will serve to illustrate what is meant by poor child placement and inadequate supervision.

Case 1

Olive, at the age of six weeks, was adopted from a commercial maternity home. Some time later the foster family was reported to the Humane Society for cruelty but the Humane Society officer was unable to locate them because they had moved. After inquiry the officer of the Society made a further effort to find the family and reported as follows: "Baby Olive is now 20 months old. She looked well-nourished but was not very clean. The foster father is a truck driver. The foster mother is a highly excitable woman, extremely nervous and was much wrought up over the visit; is the type who might easily become unbalanced. She should never have been entrusted with a baby. At present they are doing light housekeeping in one room and they are evidently the sort that moves from one furnished room to another and never establishes a permanent home. Mrs. X. stated there was no trouble in securing the baby; they merely presented two written references at the maternity home and were given the baby. No subsequent visits or inquiries were made by any one from the home to determine the baby's welfare."

Four days after they had filed their petition a childless married couple were given a two year old boy in adoption. The petition stated that the child had been with them for a year.

Both the child's family and the adopting family were known to several social agencies at the time the adoption took place. The child's father had been a crane operator, and had died in the influenza epidemic leaving a wife and two small boys. For a while the mother's nephew stayed with the family and supported them, but after two years he wanted to get married so some other provision had to be made. The mother had to go back to work and appealed to a local social agency to help her arrange for the children. The six year old boy was placed in an orphanage and the year old baby was sent from the central part of the State to Philadelphia, for foster home placement. Here he was placed with the couple who eventually adopted him.

The foster home is described as consisting of five rooms in and "old but not bad" house in a poor section of the city. The husband, thirty-five years old, was a dock builder. He is described as being a good, honest, steady, clean type of man. The wife, thirty-one years old, was a good-hearted, simple woman who took good care of her house. The husband's schooling ended with the fifth grade, the wife's with the fourth. Both had had to work from an early age. The wife apparently could bear no children and they were anxious to have a child in their home.

Without consulting the Agency which placed the child in the home, they set about securing the adoption. About ten days before the application was filed a representative of this society visited the home. She found the child in the care of a neighbor, an old woman who reported that the foster mother was working in a bag factory because her husband could not work. He had "a perforated lung" resulting from overlifting two months previously. The doctor had ordered him to rest for two or three months.

The neighbor mentioned to the visitor that an adoption was pending. On the same day that the adoption was decreed, the man went to a well known chest clinic. There it was diagnosed as having fibroid tuberculosis with positive sputum. At the same time one of the children's societies received an anonymous letter stating that a man with consumption had a child in his possession and some action should be taken.

A week after the adoption decree the man consulted a second known chest clinic where he was diagnosed as having a moderately advanced case of pulmonary tuberculosis.

Ten days later the family was referred to a relief socity for assistance.

About eight weeks after the adoption the foster father was admitted to a State tuberculosis sanatorium. He stayed only two weeks and left, against the advice of the physician in charge, with his condition unimproved. Three weeks after the man left the sanatorium the foster mother appealed to the society that had placed the child in their home to take care of him for a little while. She said that her husband was suffering with tuberculosis and could not live much longer and that she had to go out to work. She did not want to relinquish the child permanently but she had to have temporary assistance. Her situation seemed to have been somewhat worse than that of the child's own mother when he was accepted for placement.

When, about three weeks later, an attempt was made to find the family, it had moved from the address given. Inquiry among neighbors near the place to which they moved elicited the information that the woman had taken the child to visit some of her relatives in New York and that the husband was to go to "some sort of institution."

Case 3.

One petition for adoption in 1923 was refused because, on investigation by the Philadelphia Department of Welfare, it was found that a married woman describing herself as a widow in the petition, was perpetrating, with the connivance and assistance of officials of a maternity hospital, a deliberate fraud on her husband in regard to the birth of a child.

Lax Methods of Child Placement in Public Agencies

In at least two of the counties studied by the U. S. Children's Bureau it was found that employed probation officers were giving out children from juvenile court to people who applied for them. No further supervision was exercised. One of these officers keeps no records and did not know many children he had given out. The qualifications of these two officers for such placement work were almost nil; they were both past sixty years of age when they were provided with these positions for which they had no training or educational experience whatever. In a third county the volunteer probation officer regularly placed incorrigible and delinquent boys on farms. He had no systematic method of visiting boys even though it is well known that the placement of children with behavior difficulties requires the most careful and detailed attention. Otherwise it is apt to be merely a form of child labor available to those who are willing to undertake the disagreeable task of forcing the boy to perform it.

The placement activities of the directors of the poor and county commissioners in some places were equally open to question. In one county it was charged by the local children's society that the county commissioners placed children without investigating the foster homes at all. The Commissioners maintained that, although they did not visit the foster home either before or after placement, they did inquire among neighbors. The Commissioners were of the opinion that if there was any trouble about the child they would hear it. The way in which this system has worked in one case is shown in the following instances:

A three year old boy whose mother died in the almshouse of tuberculosis came into the custody of the county commissioners. They first sent him to the children's home and later placed him in a free family home with a young couple whom they had found and who lived fifteen miles away from the county seat in a small town. After a few months rumors came to the children's society that the child was not well treated and a visit of investigation was made. The home was found to be in a filthy condition and the child showed marks of physical abuse. He seemed to have had enough to eat, however. The woman claimed that she disciplined the child by making him sit in the corner, but the neighbors reported that she and her husband hit and slapped the child and roughly knocked him about. When this was reported to the county commissioners they authorized the children's society to bring the child back to the children's home.

Methods of Controlling Child Placement in Other States

Confronted with similar conditions almost all of the States of the Union have made an effort to bring child placement activities under the observation, supervision and control of some central public authority. The efforts to accomplish such control have followed three general types: (1) State licensing, certification and control of incorporation of child caring agencies, (2) State inspection and supervision of such agencies, (3) actual State supervision of all placements made by any agency. Each system has both advantages and disadvantages.

(1) Licensing, Certification and Control of Incorporation

Among the various schemes for the public control of child placing, the most popular is the annual licensing plan. Such important states as New York, Illinois, Ohio, California and Alabama are among the 29 who employ this method. Sometimes the requirements for licensing are coupled with the provision that only unincorporated agencies need be licensed, but usually in that plan the state department of charities or welfare has the right to pass upon the character and plans of the applicants for articles of incorporation. Moreover they all have powers of continuous inspection and can move for revocation of charters of the incorporated agencies.

Summaries of the provisions of the acts of New York, Illinois, California, Ohio and Alabama are given in Appendix I.

(2) State Inspection System.

Massachusetts, as one of the older states which has been working for a long time on the legislation necessary to control child placing activities now has four points of attack: (1) control of incorporation of any child caring and charitable organization by the state department of welfare; (2) A rigid system by the department of welfare for controlling the activities of any person or agency caring for children under the age of two years. The Massachusetts act specifies that "whoever receives an infant under two years of age for adoption or for giving it a home, or for procuring a home or adoption for it, shall, before receiving the same, ascertain its name, age and birthplace, and the name and residence of its parents, and shall keep a record of the same and of the date of such reception. He shall forthwith, upon the reception of said infant, give written notice thereof to the department, and upon its request shall give information and render reports required by it concerning such infant, and within two days after its discharge shall give written notice to the department of the discharge and disposal of such infant. The department may investigate the case, and at any time prior to a decree of adoption take any such infant into its custody if in its judgment public interest and the protection of the infant so require."

The third is the requirement of regular reports from the agencies to the department. Failure to make such reports on the part of tax exempt charitable corporations renders them liable to a decree of dissolution from the Supreme judicial court on complaint of the department.

A fourth feature of importance to the Massachusetts situation is the operation of a large child placing service by the state itself. Through its department of welfare the State supervises between 5,000 and 6,000 children, state wards, in the foster homes in which the State inself, has placed them. Thus it acts as a competitor in the field as well as a supervisor of the activities of private agencies. The juvenile courts in removing neglected children from parents regularly and the overseer of the poor in dealing with dependent children use this State placing service.

Thus the State of Massachusetts has itself assumed leadership in caring for the dependent and neglected children of that Commonwealth and in that way exercises a large measure of control over private agencies.

(3) Actual State Supervision of Placement of Children

Minnesota.

A third form of State supervision appears in Minnesota. Besides annual certification of child caring and placing agencies, public or private, and annual ispection of their activities, the Minnesota law requires that:

"Whenever any person shall place a child in a private home for the purpose of providing the child with a permanent home; and whenever a child shall have been in such a home for a longer period than six months, the person responsible for the placing of the child shall immediately notify the state board of control, giving the name and address of the child, the name of the person with whom the child has been placed, with such other information regarding the child and his foster home as may be required by the board.

"Within ninety days after the receipt of the notice provided for in Section 3, the state board of control shall cause the child and the home in which he has been placed to be visited by its agents for the purpose of ascertaining whether the home is a suitable one for the child; and shall continue to visit and supervise the case of such child the same as though the child were placed out by the state public school. Whenever satisfied that a child has been placed in an unsuitable home, the board may order its transfer, and if said order is not obeyed within thirty days or such shorter time as may be named in the order, the board itself shall take charge of and provide for such child."

This differs from the Massachusetts situation where the State may step in and inspect an individual placement in that the state authorities are required to check up every such placement.

Merits and Demerits For Pennsylvania of Licensing and State Inspection Systems

In view of the conditions which prevail in Pennsylvania at the present time, your Commission regarded the third form of control of child placement as wholly impracticable for Pennsylvania which has no State machinery for actual home visiting of the thousands of placed children. Moreover the State has no machinery for doing placement work, itself. There remains the choice between the requirement of licensing and certification before an agency or person shall be permitted to place, which is a very popular form of control and the development of the present inspection system by the State Department of Welfare. After mature consideration, your Commission came to the conclusion that it would be better to strengthen the inspection system already in operation than to institute a new licensing system.

The essential characteristic of a licensing system is a rigid standard by which all placing agencies must be tested and either refused a license or authorized to proceed with the stamp of the State's approval. Obviously requirements must be kept to a bare minimum and therefore, the state finds itself in the position of seeming to endorse wholly mediocre work which is much greater in point of bulk and importance than the spectacularly bad work for which a license might be refused. Both from theoretical and from practical standpoints it seemed wiser and more effective to your Commission not to adopt a licensing system, prevalent as it is in other states, but to develop further the inspection now in operation in Pennsylvania.

State inspection detects abuses quite as systematically as does the licensing method. Instead, however, of the State licensing agency being forced to make a categorical decision with reference to each agency, it can apply educational methods in all cases in which it finds conditions which need improvement, moreover, it can seek to get an agency not only to do in a better way what it has undertaken to do but also to change its program so that it will come nearer doing what is actually needed at the present time. As was pointed out in the first report of this Commission, Pennsylvania's greatest need is for a kind of leadership in the child caring field which will bring order out of what in many communities, is chaos.

Your Commission regards it as one of the most hopeful aspects of the child caring situation in Pennsylvania that for the last several years the State Department of Welfare has been building up a staff of technically trained people who conceive it their duty to help the child caring agencies of the State do better work for children and find their right place in a child caring scheme rather than to act as police officers who now and then put some outrageously harmful and inefficient organization out of business. Your Commission conceives it a far greater service of the State to children to have a State Bureau of Children which can make objective, kindly, practicable and helpful observations and sugestions to every agency of the State, even to the best who set the pace for others, rather than to have a bureau which envisages its work as the suppression or prohibition of any well intentioned activity in behalf of unfortunate children. While it is true that there is an occasional instance when a child caring activity is undertaken by a person who is not well intentioned, or who is of such mental condition that educational efforts are of no avail, your Commission is of the belief that such instances are not of sufficient number to warrant the adoption of a system requiring the licensing of every child placing agency. In the cases of the activities of people not amenable to the suggestions of the State Department of Welfare, your Commission believes that recourse under the laws protecting children from neglect and cruelty may be had, the use of publicity by the State Department among contributors or supporters or, in the case of large organizations, those in authority, will usually secure results. All activities for children which are dependent on the public for support are sensitive to such criticism. There is moreover, a responsibility for the existence of such agencies and institutions in the use made of them by juvenile courts, poor relief officials and other agencies and in their support by welfare federations and other agencies who may be cooperating with them. In view, therefore, of all the avenues for the exerting of influences on a low standard agency, and in view also of the disadvantages of a license system, your Commission has chosen for its recommendations laws which strengthen the present system of inspection.

It has been repeatedly said to your Commission that since the efficacy of an educational approach to the handling of this problem depends wholly on the continuous service in the Department of Welfare of a personnel capable of and genuinely interested in carrying out such a program of education and friendly stimulation, it might be better to have some form of licensing which would be less dependent upon quality of personnel in its administration. Your Commission is of the opinion that the issues involved in any program of protecting children from the evil effects of poor child caring, are such that no state system is worth paying for, if it is not manned by people who know thoroughly the problems and the right solutions in this kind of work and who have qualities of leadership which secure for their ideas the necessary consideration by communities and by agencies. Without such people to operate it, a license system loses most of its value. With such people in the employ of the state, authorization of an inspection and educational system is all that is needed.

Legal Background of State Inspection of Child Caring Agencies and Institutions.

Your Commission does not regard it as necessary to retell in detail the story of the origin of the State Department of Welfare in Pennsylvania but it does seem necessary to point out that the State has had powers of inspection of private agencies since 1869. As relates to child caring activities the State Board of Charities was in that year authorized simply to "look into and examine the condition of all charitable, reformatory or correctional institutions within the State, financially or otherwise, to inquire and examine into all other matters relating to the treatment of the wards of the institution and its general management." State aided institutions were specifically to be inspected once a year and a report made to the Legislature. "Interrogatories" were to be devised by the Board and sent to the institutions under its inspection and annual reports for the use of the Legislature were to be prepared which would show "the actual condition of all charitable and correctional institutions, within the State, with such suggestions as the board may deem necessary and pertinent.(1)" In 1903 all institutions, associations and societies to which a delinquent, dependent or neglected child was committed by the courts came under the inspection of the State Board.

[1] Act of April 24, 1869, P. L. 90 later amended by the act of March 5, 1903, P. L. 11, No 12 and by the act of May 1, 1913, P. L. 149.

In 1921 the State Department of Welfare was organized and included a Bureau of Children. It inherited all of the inspection powers of the old State Board of Charities and acquired the right to inspect the places and premises in which children under three years of age were received, boarded or kept.

In 1923 the Administrative Code required the Department to inspect annually every children's institution which is so defined that it covers the following:

(1) Any incorporated or unincorporated organization, society, corporation, or agency, public or private, which may receive or care for children or place them in foster homes, either at board, wages or free.

(2) Any individual who for hire gain or reward receives for care a child unless he is related to such child by blood or marriage within the second degree.

(3) Any individual not in the regular employ of the court or of an organization, society, association, or agency duly certified by the department, who in any manner becomes a party to the placing of children in foster homes, unless he is related to such children by blood or marriage within the second degree or is the duly appointed guardian thereof."

Aim of Recommended Legislation

It seemed to your Commission that here was a broad foundation of powers of inspection upon which it would be well to build further. The measure offered is therefore designed to achieve the following ends in the control of child placement:

(1) To put the responsibility of securing State inspection on the person or agency who undertakes to place children rather than to expect the State Department of Welfare to assume the whole burden of finding and inspecting such an agency;

(2) To require the keeping of such records as will make inspection more feasible and will provide the tools for recognizing a responsibility assumed; and

(3) To set up within the law itself requirements for the minimum of supervision of children placed by agencies and persons in foster homes.

The following is the draft of a measure to carry out these purposes:

An Act

Providing for the regulation of child placement and for the supervision thereof by the Department of Welfare.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, That for the purpose of this act, the words "child placement" shall mean the placing in a foster home, either at board, wages or free of any child under the age of eighteen, except by a person related to such child by blood or marriage within the second degree or by the duly appointed guardian t hereof. The word "agency" shall mean any organization, society, institution, association or agency, public or private, incorporated or unincorporated or any employe or agent thereof.

Section 2. Child Placement Before Registration Prohibited. It shall not be lawful for a person or an agency, other than the public agencies specifically empowered by law to place children, to engage in child placement until such person or agency has registered with the Department of Welfare.

Section 3. Form of Registration. The registration shall consist of the filing of a statement giving (1) the name of the person or the agency wishing to engage in child placement, and, in the case of an agency, the name of the officers thereof, (2) the address of the person or agency, (3) a copy of the articles of incorporation or charter, if any, (4) the names of the personse who have been or are to be employed or otherwise retained to make investigations of foster homes and to visit the children placed therein, and (5) the names of the persons who are to receive applications for the care of children, or to accept children for care and to investigate their family circumstances.

Section 4. Right to Enter and Inspect Foster Homes. The Department of Welfare and its duly authorized agents shall have the right to enter and to inspect any foster home in which a child has been placed by any person or agency engaging in child placement.

Section 5. Visitation of Children in Foster Homes. Every person or agency engaging in child placement shall regularly visit or cause to be visited by a responsible agency, every child that such person or agency has placed, as often as may be necessary to insure that the child shall receive the proper treatment and that its health and well being shall be safeguarded.

Section 6. Records to be Kept by Persons or Agencies Engaging in Child Placement. All persons and agencies engaging in child placement shall keep a record of each child accepted for placement, which shall contain, (1) the correct and full name of the child, (2) the name and address of each parent and grandparent, (3) the date and place of birth of the child, (4) the name and the address of the person from whom the child was received, (5) the name of the foster parents with whom the child may be placed, (6) the address of such foster parents and all changes thereof as long as the child is in their care, (7) a description of the child's condition found on each visit and of the efforts made to promote his health and well being, (8) in case of the death of a child, the date, place and cause of death and the place of burial.

Section 7. Reports of Children Placed. Every person or agency engaging in child placement shall make a report every three months to the Department of Welfare on dates to be fixed by the Department, and on blanks furnished by the Department, of the children in the care of such person or agency and not in their own homes. Such reports shall show, (1) the number of children in care at the beginning of the period, (2) a list showing the exact age of every child received for placement during the period, (3) the number of children discharged from care and the dispositions made of them during the period, and (4) the number of children remaining in care at the end of the period.

Section 8. Penalty. Any person or agency engaging in child placement without registration as provided for in this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof, shall be sentenced to pay a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars.

Section 9. Burden of Proof. In any prosecution arising out of the violation of any provision of this act where a defendant relies in defense upon the relationship of any child to himself, he shall have the burden of proof thereof.

Section 10. Effective Date. This act shall take effect and be in force on the first day of July, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-seven.

The Measure to Prohibit the Placement of Children for Hire, Gain or Reward

To accompany the act providing for the further control of child placement, your Commission wishes to submit a measure intended to prohibit what might be termed the corrupt practices of child placement. Occasionally here and there some person or some small agency or its representative collects or accepts money from natural or foster parents for placing a child. Your Commission has no reason to think that this is a widespread practice, but it does believe that when it occurs it constitutes a very serious breach of ethics on the part of a professional child welfare worker and that in the case of persons operating independently and not subjected to the scrutiny of boards of trustees of agencies and fellow workers, it can be a very serious evil. Moreover if a profit seeking motive is permitted to operate in the child placing field, it confuses the issues which should always be confined strictly and exclusively to the child's best interests. To determine these is usually difficult enough.

Your Commission believes that Pennsylvania now has sufficient philanthropic resources, either actual or potential to meet on a wholly non-commercial basis any need for child placing that there may be in any community.

Your Commission regards this measure as partaking of the nature of a refinement of the principle well established in the acts prohibiting the traffic in children. The Act on this subject now in effect (Act of April 18, 1905, P. L. 213) makes it a misdemeanor to "trade, barter, buy, sell or deal" in infant children.

The act submitted for your consideration is as follows:

Prohibiting Child Placement for Hire, Gain or Reward.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, That for the purposes of this act the words "child placement" shall mean the placing in a foster home either at board, wages or free of any child under the age of eighteen. The word "agency" shall mean any organization, society, institution, association or agency, public or private, incorporated or unincorporated or any employe or agent thereof.

Section 2. Any person or any agency or any representative of any agency who for hire, gain or reward accepts a child for placement or offers to place a child or who for hire, gain or reward, gives a child to a foster parent or parents, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof, shall be sentenced to pay a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars or undergo an imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court. This section shall not be construed to mean that it is a misdemeanor for a person or an agency to receive reasonable payment for a child's maintenance pending its placement.

An Act Providing for the Licensing of Maternity Homes and Hospitals

Among the primary requirements of an adequate program of child welfare in a state are those measures which seek to safeguard life and health of that period of childhood in which there is still greatest danger—birth and early infancy. Likewise those measures which throw protections around the babies who are not greatly wanted and whose births are regarded as a misfortune to their mothers, are at the very foundation of any set of intelligent child saving efforts. Of all children these are in greatest immediate need of help from the community and should be the objects of special interest to it.

Your Commission's measures on adoption procedure and on the licensing of infant boarding houses were parts of such a program. There are, however, many other points of attack and the careful control of places which offer maternity service is important among them.

Maternity homes and hospitals have been organized and opened from various points of view. Many are the expressions of religious and philanthropic feelings—the desire to help the erring, the weak and the unfortunate; others grew out of commercial motives. Because they could not be run without income, some of the philanthropic institutions have taken on commercial features, while the commercial ones have, in some instances, sought to overlay the money making aspect with an atmosphere of philanthropy.

In efforts to help women whose pregnacy is regarded as unfortunate, two kinds of service are usually thought of, first, confinement and maternity service; second, the placement of the child. In their crudest form maternity homes provide a refuge in which a woman or a girl may stay during the latter months of pregnancy and may be confined and from which she may depart leaving her baby to be cared for or placed at the discretion of the "home." Thus they serve as places where child abandonment can be systematically and safely practised.

As time has gone on, the dangers and evils of such a solution of the difficulties of mother and child, have become more and more apparent. The unwholesomeness of massing of girls and women with careers of all degrees of delinquency at a time when physical strain and nervous instability is prevalent, became obvious. The menace of venereal infections was discovered. The immediate separation of the babies from their mothers was seen to be a serious menace to the child's life; the non enforcement of paternal obligations made for paternal indifference and irresponsibility; the hasty decision of the immature mother to abandon her child sometimes later developed into a tragedy in her life far worse than keeping the baby would have been. It is not an uncommon experience of such places to have mothers returning years afterward and begging distractedly to be told of their children. Some of the maternity homes were so poor financially that they were not properly equiped or operated to safeguard the life and health of the mother or the baby. Some were operated by people so unaware of the physical, mental and social needs of their patients that great harm was done.

On account of the complicated issues involved, the managers of such institutions are often under great temptation and pressure to follow unethical practices of one kind or another in their relations with their patients, with the fathers of the children, with families seeking to adopt children, and with other persons involved in the cases. A simple illustration of the kind of situations which arise came to the attention of your Commission when its secretary was invited within the last year to attend the board meeting of such an institution just over the line in a neighboring State. The question at issue was whether the institution should keep a sum of money which seemed to belong to one of the patients. A young girl of poor family and inefrior mentality had come to the place and had her baby which was quickly placed. The man who was involved had paid several hundred dollars for the mother's and baby's care. The mother was, in the judgment of the matron ready to be discharged back to her family, long before the money was used up, according to the rates ordinarily charged. The board of directors was debating whether the difference should be given to the girl and her family or regarded as a contribution to the institution! Among some of the board members there was an appreciation that this money really belonged to the girl and might be spent to good advantage in preparing her to overcome her serious handicaps for earning her living and finding some legitimate satisfactions in life. Other board members and the matron could see no way that the home could help the girl after she left their doors and as she was thought to be incapable of prudent expenditure without supervision, the solution which they thought best was for the home simply to keep the money to meet the confinement expenses of some other girl who might become involved with a man less able to pay. This instance is cited not as typical of the procedure under similar circumstances which the majority of maternity homes would follow, but of the possibilities for unethical relationships in dealing with situations in which ordinary rules of life have been upset and where a considerable degree of secrecy prevails.

In the three illustrations given above of indifferent and careless child placing, two maternity homes in Pennsylvania were involved.

Number and Capacity of Maternity Homes in Pennsylvania

According to the reports of the Department of Welfare, there are in the State at present 24 institutions under inspecition as maternity homes. A maternity home, according to the Administrative Code of 1923 is any place where, "within a period of six months, any person receives for care or treatment, during pregnancy or during or immediately after parturition, more than one woman, except women related to such person by blood or marriage within the second degree."

It was found by the U. S. Children's Bureau in 1922 that of 24 institutions which were strictly classified as maternity homes, the "total number of individuals cared for during 1922 could ascertained with some degree of accuracy for 22 homes, but the condition of the records of two precluded the possibility of using their figures at all. The records of 22 institutions during the year showed that 1,573 expectant mothers, 358 mothers with babies, and 1,389 other inmates, including very young children, older girls, aged women, and women who were chronic invalids, were cared for in these institutions.

"The total population of all the homes when visited was 464 women and 787 children. At this time the maternity hospitals in the State were crowded to capacity, but the maternity homes were not. These conditions were more marked in some institutions than in others.

"The capacity of 23(1) institutions varied from 6 women and 6 children to 76 women and 375 children (children of the maternity patients of those in the institution's child-caring department).

"The 23 homes had an aggregate capacity for 599 women-exclusive of staff members or other employees and for 1,000 children."(2)

(1) In estimating the capacity of the institutions one very large hospital was omitted because of the difficulty in ascertaining the number of beds available for unmarried mothers.

(2) U. S. Children's Bureau, A Study of Maternity Homes in Minnesota and Pennsylvania, Washington, D. C., 1926, Publication No. 167.

The definition of a maternity home and hospital in the administrative code would seem to cover all hospitals, general as well as special and all almshouses which accept such cases. Inasmuch, however, as most of the general hospitals are State aided and therefore subject to inspection and as all of the almshouses are subject to State inspection, the Department has not included them as place subject to inspection in the category of maternity homes and hospitals.

In addition to the regularly designated maternity homes, the State aided general hospitals and the almshouses which take maternity cases, there are the non-State aided hospitals and the small ventures in private hospitals care for maternity cases which doctors, nurses and lay persons establish from time to time. Both of these latter would seem now to be subject to State inspection under the Administrative Code, but the responsibility now devolves on the Department to find them.

Act of 1893 for the Licensing of Lying-In Hospitals

The dangers which attach to private and unsupervised institutions giving maternity care were recognized by the Legislature in Pennsylvania as early as 1893, when an act was passed which vaguely tried to bring them under control. Nothing short of quoting this act will indicate its wholly ineffective character.

Act of April 26, 1893, P. L. 24

Section 1. Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be lawful for the board of health of any locality to license any person or persons, other than an institution duly incorporated for such purpose, to establish and keep a lying-in hospital, ward or other private place for the reception, care and treatment of women in labor, upon written application filed with the said board accompanied by the indorsement of six or more reputable persons, citizens of the county where such hospital may be situated, who shall certify to the respectability of the applicant, and that the hospital, hospital ward or other private place shall only be used for ligitimate, moral and charitable purposes; and if, after due inquiry of such board of health, it is believed that the applicant is a proper person, and the premises are suitable and properly arranged for such purpose, the said board of health shall grant a license for the purpose above mentioned, upon the payment of a fee of five dollars. Such license shall continue in force for a period of two years, subject, however, to be revoked by the board of health granting the same, upon the violation of the rules and regulations enacted by the said board of health for the government of said hospitals, hospital wards or other private places. The proprietor of every such hospital, hospital ward or other private place kept for lying-in purposes, shall keep a record in a book for the purpose containing the full name and address of each person admitted, the date of admission, the date of birth of every child, the date of its removal, and the place to which such child shall be removed. Such hospital, hospital ward or other private place, shall be subject to the visitation or inspection at any time by the board of health granting the said license, or any special officer that may be appointed for that purpose by the court of common pleas, upon the petition of any society for the prevention of cruelty to children of the proper county.

Section 2. The proprietor of every hospital, hospital ward or other private place for lying-in purposes to which a license has been granted according to section one of this act shall, within five days after the birth of any child, report to the said board of health the date and place of such birth, the name, sex and color of the child.

Section 3. Whoever shall violate the provisions of section one of this act by keeping a hospital, hospital ward or other private place lying-in purposes for hire or reward, without license, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and for the first offense, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, and for the second offense, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding two hundred dollars and imprisonment of not more than one year, or either or both, at the discretion of the court.

Section 4. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

So far as your Commission is able to discover, this act is of limited value in controlling conditions in these institutions. In 1922-1923, of 24 institutions operating in this field, but two had licenses. (1) In Philadelphia there are ten private institutions and operators licensed under this act.

In 22 States of the Union there are licensing measures in operation which place the licensing power in a State department. These include such populous States as Massachusetts, Illinois, California, Michigan, Iowa, Kansas, New Jersey, Indiana and Minnesota.

Maternity Homes and Hospitals Required to Make and Keep Foot Prints of Babies Born Therein

In 1925 the Legislature enacted a measure requiring all maternity homes and hospitals to keep finger prints or foot prints to identify the children born in these institutions. (Act of April 29, 1925, P. L. 358). No machinery for enforcement was provided, however.

Study of Maternity Homes in Pennsylvania

In the survey of the child welfare conditions and resources of the seven counties of Pennsylvania no attempt was made to cover the subject of maternity homes and hospitals for the reason that the U. S. Children's Bureau had already made a special study of these institutions in Pennsylvania during 1922-1923. The results of that study have been referred to above as U. S. Children's Bureau Publication 167, "A Study of Maternity Homes in Minnesota and Pennsylvania."

In this report are set forth the findings of an objective and impartial examination into the operation of these homes in these two States. At the time of the study, these institutions in Pennsylvania had just come under State inspection. In Minnesota there had been a State license system in operation for some years and much attention had been devoted to the subject. Under that license system in the course of about four years 12 maternity hospitals had been closed by the State board of control.[1] Four had been conducted without a license, four were refused licenses on application, three which had been granted licenses were denied renewals of the licenses, one withdrew its application, immediately after the visit of investigation by the State inspector of institutions. Three of the institutions closed in Minnestoa moved to other States.

[1] A Study of Maternity Homes in Minnesota and Pennsylvania, U. S. Children's Bureau Publication, No. 167, p. 14.

Comparisons between the group of maternity homes in Minnesota and the group in Pennsylvania revealed what might have been expected. In both States there were some very good institutions whose progress depended upon the vision, initiative and professional skill of the people responsible for their maintenance. Both had several institutions of mediocre grade. In Minnesota, however, the institutions with practices of such low grade as to constitute a menace to the health and well-being of their supposed beneficiaries have been cut off. In Pennsylvania they were going on. A few excerpts from this report will indicate the particulars in which low standards of service appear. Quotations are made directly from this official report.

"In both States the diets for expectant mothers fell considerably short of desirable standards. Only one home in Minnesota was classed as definitely 'adequate' and none in Pennsylvania. Minnesota, however, had a larger proportion of the homes 'probably adequate' in diet than Pennsylvania—2 out of 11 as compared with 1 out of 21 (the diet of 3 Pennsylvania homes was not rated)."(1)

"Medical examinations and supervision.—In Minnesota every home except one (and when this one was visited new policies were in process of adoption) gave the patients at the time of admission complete and thorough obstetrical and physical examinations (including Wassermann tests and vaginal smears), which are recognized as the first essentials in the care of expectant mothers. In Pennsylvania, although all but one home gave a physical examination which included pelvic measurements, urinalysis, and blood pressure, less than half gave the Wassermann blood test as part of the routine examinations, and only one-fourth gave the Wassermann test of placental blood; in more than one-fourth the examination was so superficial that venereal infections might easily have escaped detection.

"Confinement care given within the home was 'poor' in one home in Pennsylvania and in none in Minnesota, and its was 'fair' in two homes in each State."[3]

[3] Ibid. p. 7,

"Medical supervision of patients during pregnancy, with attention to individual needs, was 'excellent' or 'good' in the large majority of Minnesota homes, those closely in touch with the medical school of the University of Minnesota having very satisfactory practices. Excellent records on medical care were practically universal in the Minnesota homes, but in the Pennsylvania homes records were not so well kept, a few homes keeping none."[1]

"In Minnesota all the homes which excluded applicants with venereal diseases gave sufficiently thorough examinations to make reasonably sure that such cases did not escape detection; some homes required in addition to their own examination a certificate of freedom from disease signed by a member of the State board of health. In Pennsylvania, on the other hand, the inadequate examination might have permitted applicants with venereal diseases to enter several homes which had the policy of excluding them. In such cases not only might other patients become infected but the patients with venereal disease would fail to receive adequate treatment. More than half the Pennsylvania homes kept patients in isolation until examination if they could not be examined upon arrival. More than one-fourth made no attempt to protect from infection patients already in the home."(2)

[2] Ibid. p. 9.

"All the homes studied in both States reported that they used a prophylactic in the eyes of newborn babies, but nevertheless in one home in Pennsylvania a nursery was visited in which four of the eight babies had acute ophthalmia."(1)

"A number of homes in Minnnesota but only one in Pennsylvania took precautions at the time of admission against other communicable diseases as well as venereal—such as taking throat and nose cultures and vaccinating against smallpox. In all the home in both States patients suspected of having an infectious disease, other than venereal, were isolated. Mental defectives were received in all the homes except two in Pennsylvania and one in Minnesota, unless the condition of these patients was such as to make them difficult to manage. Mental defectives were not segregated either in the Pennsylvania or the Minnesota homes that admitted them."(2)

"In Minnesota practically all remained at least three months because of the requirement by the State Board of control that babies of illegitimate birth in maternity homes be breast fed for at least that length of time; but in Pennsylvania wide variations existed in the periods of aftercare of the different home. About one-fifth discharged the patients any time after they had left the hospital, about one-third endeavored to have them remain during the nursing period, and a little less tha half defiitely tried to keep them for this period."(3)

[3] Ibid. p. 8.

"The mortality of infants during the first three months of life for the 13 Pennsylvania homes for which the information was available was about twice that which would have been expected both at the rate prevailing in the State as a whole and at the rate prevailing in the entire birth-registration area (32 as compared with 16.6 and 15.4, respectively), whereas the mortality of the group studied in 10 Minnesota homes was approximately one and one-half times that which would have been expected both at the rate prevailing in the State as a whole and at the rate prevailing in the birth-registration area (28 as compared with 18.8 and 20.8, respectively)."[1]

[1] A Study of Maternity Homes in Minnesota and Pennsylvania, U. S. Children's Bureau Publication No. 167, p. 10.

"An intensive study of a limited number of Minnesota cases and of the records of the six Pennsylvania homes (one-fourth of the number studied) which had information on this point indicated that paternal responsibility was fixed by the courts or voluntarily assumed in a much larger proportion of cases in the Minnesota homes than in those in Pennsylvania."(2)

"No home of those visited in Minnesota accepted babies on surrender from their mothers, whereas in four Pennsylvania homes the 'surrender fees' were one of the sources of income."(3)

[3] Ibid. p. 11.

"In Minnesota the proportion of homes having small rooms with single beds was much higher than in Pennsylvania—7 of the 11 Minnesota homes studied as compared with only 1 of the 24 Pennsylvania ones. Several homes in each State had large dormitories which were crowded; in some of the Pennsylvania homes the dormitory beds were so close together that it was hard to pass between them."(1)

"In all the Minnesota homes the importance of personal hygiene as part of parental care was recognized in the requirement that patients bathe at least twice a week; in a few Pennsylvania homes there were no regulations, the patients bathing when they pleased.

"In both States the atmosphere of most of the homes was pleasant and homelike, only one or two exceptions being observed. The day's program usually allowed the patients free time for sewing, reading, or recreation..... Well-planned programs of recreation were found, however, in only about one-third of the Minnesota homes, and only about one-sixth of the Pennsylvania homes had either regular or occasional provisions for recreation other than the evening gatherings of the patients under the supervision of a staff member."(2)

[2] Ibid. p. 7.

On the basis of information gathered in these two States, the conclusion was reached that "The medical and physical care given mothers and babies in maternity homes and the social provisions made for them after leaving the homes appeared to be much better in Minnesota than in Pennsylvania, although the homes in Minnesota failed to measure up in certain particulars to the accepted standards of care. The system of State licensing and supervision of maternity homes and the relation of the State University's medical school to them tend toward standardization of medical practices in the Minnesota institutions. Through the procedure and policies of the State board of control a baby of illegitimate birth is practically assured of three months' nursing by his mother. This board endeavors also to keep such a baby permanently with his mother, to supervise and help her after she leaves the maternity home, and to obtain for the baby if possible, his father's interest and support. These efforts by the board are contributing to improve physical care for both mothers and babies and a better social policy in dealing with them."(1)

An Act for the Licensing of Maternity Homes and Hospitals

In view of these facts your Commission is of the opinion that the present system of inspection of maternity homes and hospitals as now defined, should be combined with the older principle of licensing of all such places. Thus the Department would be enabled to enforce its requirements upon an institution to improve its service. Moreover the responsibility would be put squarely upon those who maintain such institutions to notify the Department of Welfare and set in motion, State supervision and inspection.

Your Commission offers the following measure:

An Act

Regulating maternity homes and hospitals; providing for the licensing and supervision thereof by the State Department of Welfare; fixing penalties and placing the burden of proof as to certain facts on the person prosecuted.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, That the term "Maternity Home and Hospital" as used in this act shall mean any house, home or place in which, within a period of six months, any person, agency, association or organization whatsoever, incorporated or unincorporated, receives for care or treatment, during pregnancy or during or immediately after parturition, more than one woman, except women related to such person by blood, or marriage within the second degree.

Section 2. Maintenance of, Without License, Prohibited. No person or persons and no agency, association or organization whatsoever, incorporated or unincorporated, shall maintain, operate or conduct any maternity home or hospital without having a license therefor issued by the Department of Welfare of this Commonwealth.

Section 3. Application for License. Any person or persons or any agency, association or organization desiring to secure a license for maintaining, operating or conducting a maternity home or hospital shall make application therefor to the said Department of Welfare upon blanks to be furnished by the said Department.

Section 4. Issuance of License. The Department of Welfare shall, when satisfied that the applicant or applicants for such license are proper persons and that the place sought to be used as a maternity home and hospital is a fit and suitable place for such purpose and is properly equipped therefor and when all the requirements of this act and the rules and regulations of the department have been complied with, issue such license and keep a record thereof and of the application therefor.

Section 5. Term and Contents of License. All licenses granted by the department shall be for a period of not more than one year. The license shall state the name of the licensee or licensees, the particular premises where such maternity home or hospital may be maintained, operated and conducted and the number of mothers and of infants who may be cared for at one time.

Section 6. Number of Patients to be Kept, Posting License. No greater number of mothers and of infants than is authorized by the license therefor shall be kept at any one time in any maternity home or hospital, and when required by the Department of Welfare the said license shall be posted in a conspicuous place on the premises of the maternity home and hospital.

Section 7. The Department of Welfare to Adopt Rules and Regulations. The Department of Welfare may with the approval of the State Welfare Commission, make and adopt rules and regulations, not inconsistent with this act for the issuance and renewal of such licenses, for the proper maintenance, operation and conduct of such maternity homes and hospitals, for the effective enforcement thereof and for the preservation, filing and indexing of the records and means of identification of infants required by the Act approved the twenty-ninth day of April, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-five, entitled "An Act for the identification of infants born in places where maternity cases are handled; providing for the taking of finger or foot prints of infants, and the filing of the same, and charging persons in charge of such places within the enforcement thereof."

Section 8. Revocation of the License. The Department of Welfare may revoke such license, provided the license is violating the statutes or the rules and regulations for the licensing of maternity homes and hospitals, three months after the Department has specifically called the law and the rules and regulations to his attention.

Section 9. Right to Enter and Inspect the Premises. The Department of Welfare and its duly authorized agents and the local health authorities shall have the right at any time to enter, visit and inspect the premises of any maternity home and hospital.

Section 10. Records to be Kept by Licensee. Every licensee of a maternity home or hospital shall keep a record in a form prescribed by the Department of Welfare of the name and address of every patient received, of the date of admission, of the date of birth and name of every infant born therein, of the date of discharge of every patient and the names and addresses of the person or persons if other than the parent or parents of an infant, to whose care said infant was discharged and such other information as may be required by the Department of Welfare.

Section 11. Penalty. Any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof, shall be sentenced to pay a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars ($1,000), or to undergo imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

Section 12. Budren of Proof. In any prosecution arising out of the violation of this act or the rules and regulations of the Department of Welfare pertaining to the maintenance, operation and conduct of maternity homes and hospitals, where a defendant relies for defense upon the relationship of a woman to himself, he shall have the burden of proof thereof.

Section 13. Acts Repealed. The following act is hereby repealed absolutely:

An act approved the twenty-sixth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-three (P. L. 24), entitled "An act to provide for the licensing and regulation of lying-in hospitals."

All other acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Section 14. Effective Date. This act shall take effect and be in force on the first day of October, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-seven.

An Act to Amend the Juvenile Court Laws

No question in the field of child welfare is more actively debated than that of the function and place of the juvenile court in the community scheme for taking care of children in serious trouble. The origins of the court's present jurisdiction and practices ramify in many directions in the great body of law of this Commonwealth. To set out these facts of law and their growth in as simple and practicable a way as possible, your Commission has recently published a 177 page bulletin, "The Legal Foundations of the Jurisdiction, Powers, Organization and Procedure of the Courts of Pennsylvania in their Handling of Cases of Juvenile Offenders and of Dependent and Neglected Children." Three thousand copies are being distributed to members of the Legislature, judges and court officials, child caring agencies and interested citizens. It is hoped thereby to put before the legislators and the public all of the legal material and some of the social facts pertinent to a discussion of these many questions.

This bulletin is intended to serve as a reference document not only for discussion of the phases of the question to be brought up at this session of the Legislature, but also in the future as other related matters arise.

Four Aspects of the Powers of Juvenile Courts

The powers of the juvenile court fall into four main divisions. The first regards the court as an instrument for dealing with child offenders. Common sense as well as scientific study of human behavior has for a long time taken it for granted that in the application of the theories of the criminal law, some kind of modification in the case of child offenders must be made. The problem has been to harmonize such modification, on the one hand, with the laws necessary to protect the community against serious acts of depredation and anoyance by children, and on the other hand, with those laws which protect the person accused of such acts from unjust prosecution.

In very recent time there has been the conception of dealing with a child offender from a purely parental and constructive point of view and in such a way as to prevent if possible his continuing in a course of law breaking and trouble making. Thus the interest of the community and the child are harmonized.

In the United States the legal problems of making the necessary modifications in the criminal law so that children's cases could be handled in that constructive way, have been so serious that resort has been had to the theory of chancery jurisdiction as the kind of governmental powers exercised in dealing with these cases. This theory of law casts every child offender into the role of being a ward of the State and a candidate for a possible change of custody as a matter of protection to himself. While these theories have been advanced in legal treatises and, to a certain extent, have become the basis of practices within the juvenile courts themselves, it is safe to say that from the standpoint of popular understanding, offending children are regarded as subjects of public discipline and the juvenile court as a modified form of criminal court. The fundamental conception of the child offender as a ward of the State in any sense similar to that of wards in chancery has not yet been absorbed into the thinking of the mass of people of the community.

The second division of the jurisdictional power of the juvenile court relates to its authority over parents and other adults who fail to support or who neglect, mistreat, or abuse children, or contribute to their delinquency. This consists of the power to deprive a parent of custody of this child, to order him to pay for the support of his child and to initiate prosecutions of any person who mistreats a child or who encourages him to pursue a career of delinquency.

The third division of the powers of the juvenile court establishes it as an agency in the community actually to take care of unfortunate children. It is largely in this connection that the court in Pennsylvania exercises jurisdiction in the case of dependent children. As this phase of the court's work has developed, it has passed entirely from the realm of the judicial to that of an administrative branch of the government. In the case of neglected children the court has a dual function (1) to decide the question of custody and (2) to order the support of the child which may be by the parents or from public funds.

The fourth division of the juvenile court's powers is that which permits it to commit mentally and physically defective children to specialized institutions and agencies for their treatment and custody.

The Juvenile Court as a Child Caring Agency

Of these four kinds of powers of the juvenile court, your Commission regards that which turns the juvenile court into a general child caring agency as an obstacle to its proper growth and functioning. As was pointed out in the first report of this Commission, there have been two points of view in the United States on the necessity and wisdom of the juvenile courts attempting to perform administrative functions in the actual care of needy children. Where there is no question of disputed custody or the enforcement of parental responsibility, arrangements for the care of a child usually require no exercise of any judicial power. Yet as the jurisdiction of juvenile court of Pennsylvania is at present interpreted, it is considered a proper activity of the court simply to determine by hearing or investigation that a child is in whole or in part a charge on the public, and then to order that its support shall be paid by the county commissioners. Sometimes the court of parents able and willing to support them are declared dependent and committed to some custodian with an order on the county for their board and an order on the parent to reimburse the county for its outlay. This method is used to guarantee that the private institution or agency will receive board for the child. In a large proportion of the cases of dependent children there is no contest over the child's custody, there is no dispute regarding the source from which the child's support is to come. The court is used purely as a device to secure the payment of the childs board from public funds or to establish the court as a collecting agency of board from parents.

On the the most interesting points raised with reference to the power of the court in the cases of dependent children has been that of deciding whether the court might order the payment of these funds to the parent himself either directly or under some subterfuge such as paying to some official or agency, who would board the child with his own parent. Althoughi t was once decided by the Superior Court[1] that the Juvenile Court could not make orders for the support of children in their own homes such orders have been made and considerable sums of money expended in that way in some of the judicial districts.

[1] Wolf's Case, 58 Super. Ct. 260.

In the exercise of the juvenile court's jurisdiction in dependency cases there have been carried on activities duplicating those of the poor directors, of the Mother's Assistance Trustees, and for the public Subsidy of private child caring agencies. Your Commission regards the use of the court's jurisdiction in dependency cases as an element of confusion in the development of a direct and understandable plan for meeting these problems in the community and it recommends therefore, the removal of a function of child care from the juvenile court's jurisdiction.

It may be said of the two points of view with regard to the wisdom of using a court as a child caring institution that where there are other resources, public and private, which are recognized and properly used, there is but one opinion—that public and private administrative agencies should care for the poor children of the community without any recourse to a court of any kind. It is only as other resources in the community are deficient, that this work is pushed upon the juvenile court and the use of the court for this purpose is defended.

Dependency and Neglect cases in Juvenile Court in the Seven Counties Studied

So far as your Commission can see, this use of the juvenile court as a substitute for poor relief in its varius forms is confined largely to the large and intricately organized urban communities. For the year beginning July 1, 1923, it was found in the study of the seven counties that only 171 petitions alleging either dependency or neglect or both came before the juvenile courts. This should be compared with 746 cases of children under sixteen years in courts for delinquency and incorrigibility.

Of these dependency and neglect cases, 30 were disposed of informally. The court records reveal that in 6 of these 30 cases investigation showed there was no foundation for the "charge;" 9 of the children were left with, or returned to, parents or relatives, 2 other were sent to other juvenile courts where one or both parents were living, and in the case of 2 children the father was "forced" to buy clothing for them. Of the remaining 11 cases, 2 were placed in foster homes by the probation officer, and for 8 children institutional care was arranged; one was turned over to a charitable society. So far as the records reveal, some even of this small number of children could have secured admission to institutions and their placement in foster homes through family welfare or child caring organization in the community without the use of the court.

The 141 cases of dependent or neglected children, who had formal hearings in the seven counties, were disposed of as follows:

Case dismissed or child returned to parents or relatives	28
Child placed in foster home or with agency to secure foster home	33
Child returned to France	1
Committed to institutions	70

Of the 70 commitments to institutions, 53 were made by one juvenile court in a populous county which has no agency which performs the services ordinarily carried on by children's aid societies. Of these 53 children, 36 were committed to 8 different institutions for the care of delinquent or incorrigible children. It is obvious that some of these children were neglected in the literal meaning of the term and others were defective and could have been committed under the Mental Health Act.

On account of the uncertainty of some of the records throughout the seven counties, it was found difficult to find out exactly what financial arrangements were made for these dependent and neglected children, but it seems that orders on the county commissioners were made in about 81 cases. In 3 cases the board was to be paid to relatives; in 12 to private boarding homes; in 10 to child placement societies and in 56 to institutions. Deducting the orders made for children sent to institutions for the delinquent and the mentally defective, leaves only 62 orders for the care of dependent or neglected children either with relatives, in foster homes or in institutions.

In these counties there was a total of 1684 children who in the course of a year received care away from their families. The source of their support were found to be as follows:

Sources of support of dependent children cared for away from home, by types of custody, seven counties of Pennsylvania, July 1, 1923, to June 30, 1924

Sources of support	Cases of children under care away from home
	Total	In custody of institutions	In custody of agencies

Self (or wages)	4	1	3

(1) In some cases publicly supported or subsidized.

It is the opinion of your Commission that the very small number of real dependency cases which came into the juvenile courts in these seven counties which had an aggregate population of 730,000 people and a total of 8145 children who in the course of a year had received some form of organized assistance of a charitable character, indicates that there is a little disposition on the part of these courts or of these communities (1) to regard the juvenile court as a general child caring agency, (2) to build up its resources so that it could thus be used or (3) to accept cases which present no problems other than the securing of support from the public.

One of the consequences of using the juvenile court as a resource for the support of children is that it soon comes to be regarded simply as a public charity where people can go to get relief. It is not reserved for homeless children whose custody cannot be established.

Even among the few dependent and neglected children who were coming into the courts of the seven counties, a large proportion were coming directly from homes and parents to the court. The 171 cases came from the following family conditions: 34 from a parental home with both parents, 37 from parental home with mother, 34 from parental home with father, 8 from step-parental home, 22 from home of relatives, 2 from adoptive home, 8 from foster homes, 6 from boarding homes, 6 from institutions, 1 from place of employment and 13 from sources not reported. Thus 135 came from homes with one or both parents.

Dependent Children in the Allegheny County Juvenile Court

In order to have a somewhat detailed picture of the dependency and neglect cases passing through the Allegheny County Court for the period of a year, your Commission made a special study of the records of that court for 1924. The results of that study are given as Appendix II of this report. Its findings may be summarized as follows:

1. The general designation of dependency has become a blanket term to cover children in all sorts of situations and with various handicaps which could better be classified under other designations, i. e. mental defective, neglected, wayward and even delinquent.

2. The court's jurisdiction in dependency cases has resulted in the creation and development as a part of the court, of an elaborate child caring department which supervises nearly fourteen hundred children placed by it in foster homes. This is in itself a heavy responsibility which should not be attached to the office of a judge.

3. As a consequence the court has become a general child caring organization to which a large number of other agencies in the county shift cases of all sorts and kinds.

4. Judicial and administrative functions in the community are thoroughly confused in the sense that many children are brought to court purely for purposes of securing their support from public funds.

5. The social problems which the court handles are largely those of supervising families in the detailed process of rearing and educating their children. This is a service of education and assistance in no sense judicial in character which can better be done under an administrative department with an occasional invoking of the court when real judicial questions involving the custody of children or the fixing of responsibility for support arise.

It seems to your Commission that there must be established in each county, if it has not already been done, administrative machinery, public and private which will care for children whose parents cannot or will not provide for them. To manage such service is a technical and highly responsible administrative task. When it is in operation it should be used by the court as the resource for the care of children whom it must take from their parents. In other words instead of the court's being forced to create its own child caring machinery which is then used by all of the rest of the agencies of the community for their cases, the community should develop a child caring program which the court could use as occasion arises.

Proposed Amendment to the Juvenile Court Act

It seems clear to your Commission that the test in assigning any class of cases to the juvenile court is whether they involve the task of fixing the child's custody. In view of this and of all the facts which it has gathered your Commission recommends that the juvenile courts in Pennsylvania should be confined to three classes of children, the delinquent, the wayward and the neglected. The court has acquired by other acts exclusive jurisdiction in the commitment of crippled children and concurrent jurisdiction in the commitment of mental defectives.

In drafting the amendments necessary to make this fundamental change in the juvenile court's powers, your Commission also took occasion to make a few minor but obviously beneficial changes. They are intended only to be clearer enunciations of principles long since adopted in Pennsylvania's juvenile court legislation for the improvement of the care of child offenders. They provide that:

1. In Quarter Sessions Courts which have more than one judge, the juvenile court work shall be assigned to one judge for at least a year.

2. The prohibition against keeping children in jails and lock-ups is strengthened.

3. It is specified that the juvenile court judge may order preliminary investigations and physical and mental examinations before the hearing of the child's case.

Each f these have become matters f practice in sme places and will not be very drastic changes to effect any judicial district.

The draft of the amending act is as follows:

An Act amending sections one, two, six, seven, nine and ten and repealing section five of an act approved the twenty-third day of April, one thousand nine hundred and three (Pamphlet Laws, two hundred and seventy-four) entitled "An act defining the powers of the several courts of quarter sessions of the peace, within this Commonwealth with reference to the care, treatment, and control of dependent, neglected, incorrigible and delinquent children, under the age of sixteen years, and providing for the means in which such power may be exercised" as amended, by requiring one judge of each such court to be assigned to the juvenile court for a period of one year; limiting the jurisdiction thereof under this act to delinquent, wayward and neglected children under sixteen years of age; and regulating the transportation and confinement of children affected by this act.

In any case of the commitment of a [dependent, neglected, incorrigible, or] delinquent, wayward or neglected child under the provisions of this section, the court committing such child may order and direct that the board and clothing of, and necessary medical and surgical attendance upon, and the care of, such child, and its maintenance generally, and the necessary expense of placing or replacing such child, shall be paid by the proper county and may fix the amount which shall be paid for such board and clothing.

In all cases where it can properly be done the child shall be placed in an approved family home [and become a member of the family by legal adoption or otherwise].

Section 6. That section ten of the said act approved the twenty-third day of April one thousand nine hundred and three (Pamphlet Laws two hundred and seventy-four) is hereby amended to read as follows:

Section 7. That section five of the said act approved the twenty-third day of April, one thousand nine hundred and three (Pamphlet Laws two hundred and seventy-four) entitled "An act defining the powers of the several courts of quarter sessions of the peace, within this Commonwealth, with reference to the care, treatment and control of dependent, neglected, incorrigible and delinquent children, under the age of sixteen years, and providing for the means in which such power may be exercised" is hereby repealed absolutely.

All other acts of Assembly or parts thereof that are in any way in conflict or inconsistent with this act or any part thereof are hereby repealed.

Section 8. Effective date. This act shall take effect and be in force on the first day of July, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-eight.

Better Organization of Care of Children in Need of Assistance

In the selection of the subjects and the formulation of the measures submitted above, your Commission has been guided by its announced policy to direct attention during this biennium to the problems of the care of dependent children. The removal of the jurisdiction in dependency cases from the juvenile court looks toward the concentration of public care of needy children in the hands of an administrative branch of local government. The measures for the control of child placement and for the licensing of maternity homes and hospitals seek to control irresponsible and low standard agencies in their dealings with needy mothers and children. The abolition of indenture means the removal from the law of a recognized arrangement by which an unfortunate child could be made into a servant.

Your Commission wishes to point out that in Pennsylvania there must be devised, probably out of the duties and powers of the directors of the poor, smething in the nature of a county department of Welfare or social service to which can be delegated the public functions of the care of needy children away from their parents. This is the next important task in providing the care which the people of our State undoubtedly want for children who become public wards.

Cases of Dependent and Neglected Children in the Allegheny County Juvenile Court

It was so greatly emphasized to your Commission that the Allegheny County Juvenile Court was carrying at the expense of the county such a huge number of dependent and neglected children in its home finding department at board in family homes, that a special inquiry was made of a year's intake of dependent and neglected children by that court.

Where careful surveys have been made in Pennsylvania of the numbers of children who receive assistance in the course of a year from the charitable resources of the community, it has been found that the number amounts to a little over 3 per cent of the population under the age of sixteen years. In large cities the percentage is usually higher. If, however, it is estimated that but 3 percent of Allegheny County's 398,156 children under sixteen[1] are thus dependent, the number amounts to about 12,000 children. It is against that background that all schemes for caring for dependent children should be viewed.

Total Number of Dependency and Neglect Cases in Court

The numbers for a series of years of all cases in the Allegheny County Juvenile Court show the relative size of the various classes of cases handled by it:

1926	868	173	132	117	99	95	154	144

These represent every "case" which came to the attention of the court during the calendar year. Some of them had been known to the court before, some were new to the court. Some appeared in court more than once in the course of the year. According to the statistics compiled by the court of its cases involving dependency or neglect, the "new" cases constitute from 70 to 80 per cent of the total. In 1923 they were 78 per cent of the cases; in 1924 they were 72 per cent; and in 1925 they were 80 per cent of the total cases.

Intake of New Cases

It seemed to your Commission that for the purposes of seeing this problem of dependency cases in the juvenile court, it would be most enlightening to get a picture of a year's intake of such new cases rather than to mix with them the cases which had previous contact with the court and were re-opened during the year. Besides being a large majority of all cases, the "new" ones should be studied apart since they show the kind of situations which come to the court and the conditions at the time the court is first asked to grapple with them.

In order to learn the number and conditions of these dependent and neglected children, your Commission examined a year's case records of all the children making in that year their first appearance in Court on petitions of (1) dependency, (2) dependency and neglect and (3) neglect alone. While your Commission was interested primarily in the question of the court's jurisdiction in dependency cases and did not wish to raise the question of its jurisdiction in cases in which child neglect is alleged, it seemed better to survey all of these cases but to classify them by the kind of petition upon which they were brought to court.

The case records for the year 1924 are filed chronologically by number. Each case was read and a schedule made of it. The official figures of the court given above show a total of 352 children involved in the dependency cases, 217 in the dependency and neglect cases and 186 neglect cases. Of these, your Commission found that 265 children were involved in "new" dependency petitions, 145 in new "dependency and neglect" petitions, and 134 in new "neglect" petitions.

Families Represented

Your Commission was first interested to find out the number of different families represented by these 544 cases. The size of the family groups of children brought in were as follows:

Size of Family groups	Number of Family groups
	Total Families	Dependency Petitions	Dependency and Neglect	Neglect Petitions
Total families involved	265	144	60	61
One child	138	86	24	28
Two children	50	27	12	11
Three children	28	11	7	10
Four children	30	10	11	9
Five children	13	8	4	1
Six children	5	2	2	1
Seven children	1	.....	.....	1

On account of a slight overlapping of these three groups the actual number of different families involved is only 260 and the number of children 541. This overlapping will be disregarded hereafter.

It must not be thought that these figures represent the actual sizes of these families. They refer only to the children directly involved in these petitions. It can readily be seen that the majority of these children—403 of the 544—are appearing in court accompanied by brothers and sisters Moreover, it is clear that the task that confronts the court is one of dealing with family situations and not the disposision of stray children without families and family connections.

Parental Conditions and Family Status

It is always important to learn as much as possible of the family relationships of children who are put forward as public charges. The following table shows in detail the parental status of the 544 children.

The small number of illegitimate children, only about 8 per cent of the total, is in itself a significant fact. Almost all of these dependent and neglected children were of married parents. With regard to orphanage, only 22 of these 544 children were full orphans. One parent was reported dead in 26 per cent of the cases of dependent children, in 7 per cent of the dependent and neglected and 8 per cent of the neglected. The majority of the cases seem to involve factors of sickness, of desertion and non-support and other unhappy domestic relations, and of crime.

Amony these children the factor of homelessness comes out rather strongly. Of the 265 brought in on dependency petitions nearly 53 per cent were without parental homes; but of the 279 neglected and dependent children (145 dependent and neglected and 134 neglected) less than 25 per cent were without some kind of homes.

It will be noticed that 48 children or nearly 9 per cent had one or both parents in jail or penitentiary. The offenses for which they had been sent to prison ranged all the way from first degree murder to disorderly conduct.

To make somewhat more vivid the range and variety of problems brought to the court for adjustment and solution, the following 12 cases are summarized. In the diversity of conditions and circumstances they are truly illustrative of the variety of situations which these court cases present.

Case No. 1. Dependency Petition

Widower with seven children, boys 16, 14 and 12, girls 10 and 7, boy 5 and girl three. Father Austrian, skilled mechanic, good worker, interested in family, mother had died in child birth three years before petition was presented. Father's work was from 3 to 11 p. m. He kept house with the aid of the god-mother of the baby, and took care of the children. For some time before the filing of the petition, the baby had been cared for in an institution for infants. Here she had contracted vaginitis; she had been treated until it was thought safe for her to return to the family and then discharged. She had been home about two months when the condition reappeared. In the late summer a social agency took the case to court on petition that the child be placed in a private family. The father was willing for the child to be placed. After the child has spent several weeks in the hospital, she was committed to the home finding department with an order on the county. About eight months later the father applied to have his child returned to him. He had remarried a widow with some means and they had established a good home.

Case No. 2. Dependency Petition

Two year old white illegitimate daughter of woman 34 years old, inmate of Woodville, Insane Department, Father's whereabouts unknown. Alleged child had been in a maternity home. Described as in good condition and well nourished. Petition presented by a social agency. Child committed to the Home Finding Department with an order on the county.

Case No. 3. Dependency Petition

Three year old white girl, only child of couple who were separated; father had deserted, child was with his parents, mother whereabouts unknown. On account of differences in religion between the child's father and mother, the paternal grandparents were anxious for its custody. Non sectarian agency brought case in and secured commitment to them. Three weeks later the child's mother came into court and secured its custody. Took the child to her mother's home. A year later the maternal grandmother asked the court to place the child at board temporarily as her health was such that she could not look after the child. Wished it returned to her upon her recovery. Child committed to the Home Finding Department with an order on the county. About two months later the court received a letter from the father on the Pacific coast. He stated that he was trying to get a divorce and wanted the custody of the child.

Case No. 4 Dependency petition

Three year old girl, white, illegitimate. Mother in domestic service. Father's whereabouts unknown; had given $500 in settlement to maternal grandfather at time of child birth. Maternal grandparents reported to be people in good standing, "comfortably fixed". Mother had married but her husband had deserted. Petition presented by a social agency. Child was committed to the Home Finding Department with order of $5.60 per week on the county and mother to reimburse $2.00. A few weeks later the mother assented to the placement of the child for adoption. The next day she changed her mind. Last entry several months later the court had committed the child to a married couple who probably wished to adopt her.

Case No. 5. Dependency petition

Italian widow with three children, boy 13, girl 10 and boy 8 was working in a department store. The girl was in an institution for dependent children and the boys placed out in foster families by a children's society. Society brought the older boy in because it found him a problem child, difficult to place and also because it thought that the mother could help more than she was willing to. The mother denied her ability to pay. Said she was not working regularly and was paying toward the support of the younger boy. Court committed the child to the Home Finding Department with an order for $5.60 on the county.

Two years later boy was committed to his aunt with an order of $3.00 per week on the county. Last report indicated that the boy was doing nicely.

Case No. 6. Dependency petition

Two children, boy 2 years and baby girl, father 37 years old and mother 25. Mother in the hospital with arthritis, father a butcher, unemployed, anxious to work and support family. Children brought in by social agency. Boy sent to the Home Finding Department, girl to children's institution, orders on the county with full reimbursement by the father.

Nine months later case came into court because father was in arrears $162.40. He had met with an accident smashed his fingers. Ordered to pay $10 a week extra on arrears. Six weeks later father reported that his sister had come from Cleveland and was willing to take care of the wife and children. Children released, arrears cancelled.

Five months later family could not be located.

Case No. 7. Dependency petition

Five Polish children, the oldest fourteen years, were brought to court by a social agency for support. Father had killed the mother a year before and had been sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary. Children were living with their maternal grandmother who could not support them. Court made an order of $20.00 per week to be paid to her. One year later the grandmother died. Children then distributed to five homes. One child taken out of the State by their relatives. County orders cancelled. Within three months the four children in Pittsburgh were returned to court because the people with whom they were placed were unable or unwilling to keep them longer. All committed to the Home Finding Department with orders on the county of $5.60 each.

Case No. 8. Dependency petition

Five children of colored widower, oldest 13 years, mother had just died of tuberculosis. Father a victim of dementia praecox, worked in a fish market. The children stayed in the day time at the house of an aunt who worked out. At night they stayed in the father's rooms. Relatives in Philadelphia offered to take care of the children but father refused. Said he was sending to Alabama for his sister to come and keep house for him. Social agency brought the case in. Court returned the children to the father under court's supervision.

Five months later father placed in an institution for psychopathic patients. Four children committed to the Home Finding Department and one with aunt. Orders of $5.60 per week each made on the county.

Case No. 9. Dependency petition

Italian family composed of mother and step-father, mother had five children (oldest 16, youngest 7) by previous marriage and three by present husband. Family lived in five rooms and kept 4 boarders. Step father works irregularly, drinks to excess, mother ill. Social agency brought in the five older children. Oldest, a boy committed to maternal uncle. No order. Four girls sent to Home Finding Department, order on county for $5.60 each. Step father ordered to pay $7.00 each.

One month later children released by Home Finding Department to parents under supervision.

One year later mother had twins.

Case No. 10. Dependency petition

Widower, white, with four boys under the age of 12 years. Wife died five years before. Father had kept boys in two rooms, neat and clean, in a smaller city in the county. He was a laborer, 45 years old at time of petition. He had become ill and unable to work. The public health nurse for a little while brought in food for the children. Finally the attendance officer brought the children to court for commitment. The father asked that the oldest boy be left with him for company. Court committed all four to the Home Finding Department with an order on the county of $5.60 per week each.

Case No. 11. Dependency petition

Boy, white, three years old, found in a house of prostitution after a raid. Child was recognized as son of a girl who lived with two or three men. Officers held child in the hope that she would come for him. Child sent to Juvenile Court. Committed to Home Finding Department, the county to pay $5.60 per week.

Case No. 12. Dependency petition

Family of seven children, oldest 16, youngest eighteen months. Father an invalid, mother supports family by washing. Boy eleven arrested for throwing a cartridge in fire and slightly injuring several other boys. He was first taken to Morals court and referred from there to juvenile court on dependency petition. Child sent home on probation. Latest report, boy doing well.

[2] One family and one child brought in also on petition of dependency and neglect.
[3] One family and one child brought in also on petition of dependency and neglect.
[2] One child and one family brought in also on neglect petition.

From this table it appears that of the children brought in on straight dependency petitions, the social agencies appear directly as petitioners in 49 per cent of the 144 families, court officials appear as petitioners in 31 per cent and friends or relatives in 20 per cent. It is probable that the petitions of some clients of agencies are filed by court officials and relatives, which would somewhat augment the percentage of those known to social agencies. It is a safe assumption that the great majority of cases are brought directly or indirectly by the social agencies.

A significant feature of the situation is the large number of different agencies that appear as petitioners in these cases. It would seem as if the relatively small numbers of children which most of the agencies bring to court would scarcely enable the community to work out any very clear or stable policies with regard to the types of cases that might be accepted as a court responsibility or any very definite rules of procedure in handling these cases.

Dispositions—Custody

The first question which comes up in connection with these children is the disposition made of them, first as to custody, and second, as to financial arrangements. All of the cases which involve an issue of neglect raise the question of custody. The dependency petitions are not so clear on this point. They have therefore been examined separately. The following table shows the disposition of custody classified by the petitioners in the straight dependency cases on their first appearance in court:

Dispositions of custody of 265 dependency petitions in the Allegheny County Juvenile Court, 1924

Disposition of Child's Custody	Total	Petitioners

It is interesting to note that 110 of these 265 children were left with natural custodians, parents and relatives. In some of these cases there were elements of neglect (case 8 above). Others accepted for care away from parents were often not because of the unsatisfactory character of the custody, but because of sheer poverty.

The following two tables refer to the dependency and neglect cases. Here the dispositions as to custody are especially interesting as they contrast the judgment of the agencies with that of the court.

Dispositions—County Orders

The second question which is important is the financial arrangement made for the support of these children.

Of the 265 "dependent" children, several had second and third appearance in court in the interval between the opening of their court records in 1924 and the reading of the records by the Commission's representatives in the spring of 1926. The results of those hearings, as regards orders made on the county are given below.

Courts and court officials	1 full order on county (was a $25 fee to Polk) 3 full orders were reduced to partial reimbursement

[1] With full reimbursement

From this it appears that in the cases of all these 544 children, orders without reimbursement from the parent—the pure dependency cases—were put on the county at the first appearance of the child in court in only 96 cases (67 dependency, 17 dependency and neglect, and 12 neglect cases) or one out of six. On subsequent appearances the number of orders of this kind was increased by 9 in the straight dependency cases and by 8 among the dependency and neglect cases and 1 among the neglect cases. A few partial orders were made full orders but these are more than offset by the full orders which were reduced to partial orders. Considering the number of children represented in these petitions and considering the grist of a whole year's cases of dependency and neglect in a community the size of Allegheny County, and considering further the large number of child caring resources in that county, these court orders would seem of relatively minor importance. It is also to be borne in mind that several of the straight dependent children were candidates for commitment under the category of "neglected" and others under the Mental Health Act as defectives. At least 18 of the 265 children brought in on dependency petitions were of pronounced mentally defective types.

A year's board for all of these 114 children for whom county orders were made at the rate of $5.60 per week now must cover both board and clothing amounts to $33,206.80. If an additional amount of $100 per year per child is allowed for other expenses the total reaches $44,606.80. It is by no means out of the bounds of possibility that among the several thousand children in Allegheny County who each year receive assistance from other resources, public and private, better intake policies and a better coordination of work would yield the necessary funds and service to absorb, in the course of a year the children for whom these 114 county orders were made. It is also a grave question as to whether all of these 114 children represent the conditions which should be considered as warranting public support (see cases No. 1, 3 and 5 above).

It is true that a considerably larger sum of money is now spent annually for care of the court's wards—about $280 each for 1400, or $390,000. All of this is not spent for dependent children, however. Among these wards are the neglected, feeble-minded and incorrigible children placed at board by the county, Moreover, unless there is very active and diligent work to follow up parents and families of the dependent and to work out better adjustments for the children, either in their own homes or in foster homes or suitable institutions, the number of public charges pile up year after year and there is no assurance that the amount spent is not too large or that the best arrangements have been made for each individual child. In the work of keeping the group as small as possible all of child caring and family agencies should take an active part.

Partially Dependent Children

It will be noted from the tables above that among the straight dependency petitions, orders were made on the county with the parent partially to reimburse in the case of 54 children; in the case of dependent and neglected there were 35 children involved in such orders and among the neglected, 36 children. Obviously these 125 children are of parents with some potential ability to meet the cost of their care. These in themselves constitute a group for whom public and private administrative agencies, with the aid of the court, if necessary, and with the same funds available could surely have worked out some adequate solution without the use of the court as a child caring agency.

Full Orders on the Parents—Children Not Dependent

Seventeen dependency petitions, 12 dependency and neglect and 7 straight neglect petitions eventuated in orders made directly on the families or in the case of county orders with full reimbursement from the parents. Again these are families with income and therefore not subjects for a "dependency" action at all.

Your Commission regards it as highly significant that of a whole year's intake of children in as populous a county as Allegheny, the juvenile court has declared only 113 as full dependents on the county and 123 as partial dependents. It would seem that currently throughout the year these children could have received such care from a well co-ordinated group of child caring agencies. as would have made unnecessary the use of the juvenile court as a means for their direct care and supervision.

Residence of Families with Dependent or Neglected Children

One of the important points raised in the Commission's study had to do with the extent to which the court's services were reaching beyond the city of Pittsburgh into the county, where slightly more than half of the county's population lives and where, it is alleged, there are comparatively few private resources for the care of children, and therefore, greater need for preserving the court's service.

The following table shows the geographical distribution of these families:

Distribution by Residence of 265 families with children in Allegheny County Juvenile Court in 1924.

	Pittsburgh			Outside in County					Non-resident of County
	Total	Dependency	Dependency ond neglect	Neglect	Total	Dependency	Dependency ond neglect	Neglect	Total	Dependency	Dependency ond neglect

Petitioner not reported	1	.....	1	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....

Of the 144 families with dependent children it was found that 104 were in the city of Pittsburgh and 39 were brought in from the county. Proportions of city to county cases vary among the different agencies. Among the 38 families brought in by the Children's Service Bureau, 22 were from the ctiy and 16 from the county. All but 2 of the cases of family welfare societies were from the city.

Of the 60 families involved in dependency and neglect petitions, 43 came from Pittsburgh, 16 from outside in the county and one was non-resident to Allegheny County.

Of the 61 families of neglected children 38 came from Pittsburgh and 23 from the county.

Of the 4 neglect cases brought in by family societies, only one was from the county. Of the 15 neglect cases brought by other social agencies ten came from the county. Of these latter the Rotarians and the social workers in industrial plants are principally responsible.

Thus, of the whole group of 265 families represented in these juvenile court petitions, 184 or nearly 70 per cent came from the city, while only 80 or 30 per cent came from the county. In proportion to population, Pittsburgh furnishes more than two of these court families for every one brought in from the county.

Again it would seem that for the 80 new families from the outside Pittsburgh appearing in juvenile court in a year, there could surely be developed some form of social or community machinery which could take over the direct care of these cases from the court and thus leave it free to perform its judicial functions.

Clarification of Issues Needed

In discussing the question of dependent children in any court there must be several distinctions made if the real issues are to be reviewed. All children are dependent upon some one, usually their parents. So far in Pennsylvania this term as applied to juvenile court cases has never been properly clarified or defined. The issues in the case of a child alleged "dependent" now before a court are these:

Custody

1. Is this child in the hands of a proper custodian?
2. Is its custody contested?
3. If the child is in the hands of an unfit custodian, to whom can it be committed for better custody?

Support

1. Who is responsible for the support of this child?
2. Is it necessary to resort to compulsion to secure support from the responsible person?
3. If so, in what amount shall support be ordered and to whom payable.

4. If there is no natural source of support is there available some private philanthropic aid, either personal or organized.
5. If the child is dependent upon public funds for support, to what agency should it go?

Studies of dependent children in juvenile courts show that these primary questions are not systematically reviewed and decided in these cases. Instead a "disposition" is made which sometimes emphasizes one factor and entirely neglects the others. It can be seen that it is only the child whose custody is contested or unfit or whose natural support wilfully fails, who need any form of adjudication. All other circumstances can be met by other means. In the opinion of your Commission, there will not be a firm legal foundation under the child caring machinery of the communities of Pennsylvania until the laws and administration recognize clearly these primary considerations.

Summary of Findings and Recommendations

What the Commission was Asked to do

Act No. 374, authorizing the Governor to appoint a Commission for further study of the subject of old age pensions, approved May 13, 1925, instructs the Commission to report on the following two main points:

(1) "To make further study of the subject of old age pensions with special reference as to the advisability and practicability of a contributory system as against the straight pension idea."

(2) "To secure all available facts as to the actual working out of these plans in this country and abroad, in order to give the people of this Commonwealth the most complete information possible regarding the subject."

What The Commission Has Done

Taking up the second legislative request first, the Commission presents the following studies which it had undertaken in this country and abroad, all of which it deems essential in the presentation of the facts bearing on the problem.

(a) A report on private industrial pensions, covering a comprehensive analytical study of 370 such systems in the United States and Canada, including all those which operate either entirely or in part in Pennsylvania. This has been printed separately under the title "The Problem of Old Age Pensions in Industry."

(b) A study of the pension movement in Pennsylvania from its inception, including the main features of the Old Age Assistance Act of 1923 as well as the Supreme Court Decision declaring it null and void.

(c) A study of the pension movement throughout the United States and the Territory of Alaska covering both the bills introduced in the National Congress and those sponsored in the various state legislatures; the old age pension laws now in force, as well as short summaries of the reports of the various state commissions which have been delegated to study the problem.

(d) A study of the pension movement and the systems now in operation in 42 foreign states and nations throughout the world.

In compliance with the request of the legislature for a report as to the "advisability and practicability of a contributory system as against the straight pension idea," the Commission presents:

(1) A collection of opinions and suggestions regarding the merits of the contributory and non-contributory pension plans as well as the necessity of state action regarding the problem of old age dependency from over 100 of our leading business and industrial leaders in the State.

(2) An actuarial estimate of the cost of a contributory system of old age pensions; the problems involved in the adoption of such a plan, and certain recommendations.

Plan and Method of Investigation

The information asked by the legislature did not require a complicated method of investigation. In as much as the actual conditions facing the aged in this State have already been thoroughly studied by earlier State commissions, while the general problem of old age dependency has been investigated both in this State as well as in a number of other states, it was not considered necessary to undertake any additional studies which would merely involve a duplication of the work previously accomplished. The Commission deems it sufficient to present in this report merely short summaries of the earlier findings. The method followed in our present investigations was therefore mainly that of arduous and painstaking research, which was done by our research director, Mr. Abraham Epstein through questionnaires, personal interviews and a few month's study abroad. Mr. Epstein's time abroad was spent mostly at the International Labor Office at Geneva which generously cooperated and assisted him in assembling the mass of material presented in this report on the foreign pension systems. Short first-hand checkup studies were made in Belgium, France, England, Holland and Switzerland. The actuarial estimates were made by one of the foremost actuaries in the United States, Miles M. Dawson of New York City. For the remarkable response of the industrial leaders in this State and throughout the country who have so generously cooperated in giving us the benefit of their views as to a future state program as well as the facts regarding their own pension problems, which made possible our report on industrial pensions, the Commission feels deeply grateful and acknowledges its indebtedness to them.

Findings of The Commission

The outstanding facts disclosed from the Commission's further researches in regard to the actual conditions and working out of the various pension plans, may be summarized as follows:

Industrial Pensioners do Not Exceed 5 or 6 Per Cent of Needy Aged

(1) With reference to pension plans in industry, the Commission estimates that at the present time there are altogther approximately 400 pensions plans in operation in industrial establishments in the United States. These cover approximately 4,000,000 workers. The Commission estimates further that probably 90,000 individuals are now in receipt of some form of pension from the various undertakings, through formal and informal pension plans. The total money spent on pensions probably amounts to $43,000,000 a year while the average pension is now estimated to be $485.00 a year. Thus the concerns which have adopted a pension system of their own spend approximately $10.75 per year for each of the workers employed by them. While these figures indicate a tremendous development of these pension plans, the Commission finds that, excepting perhaps those engaged in the government service, even in the fields in which private industrial pensions have mainly developed, and ignoring entirely those engaged in agricultural pursuits, only about 16 percent of all employees engaged in the manufacturing and mechanical industries, transportation, extraction of minerals, and clerical occupations have the expectation of claiming old age pensions from the concerns for which they have worked. Studies of labor turnover show further that only 3.4 per cent of male workers and 2.4 per cent of female workers remain with one concern over 20 years. The liberally estimated number of probable pensioners today does not exceed 5 or 6 per cent of the estimated number of approximately 1,800,000 needy aged 65 years of age and over in the United States at the present time.

Financially Unsound Pension Obligations

The lack of proper financial provision to meet the pension payments has been one of the most outstanding revelations of our studies of the problem. We find also that many of the heads of the big industrial corporations who were among the first to adopt pension provisions of their own are now among the most outspoken critics of current pension methods. The studies of the industrial pension plans disclose the facts that in the vast majority of cases these pension plans are based on merely arbitrary and discriminatory provisions as to both the granting or the withholding of a pension. Practically all pension plans which have come under the scrutiny of this Commission include in their rules a number of conditions which materially limit the ability of the average employee to qualify for pensions. Many declair that it is the absence of a satisfactory State system of old age provision which has caused them to assume the burden of paying pensions to their own work-people.

As pension obligations are now carried, the Commission cannot help concluding that unless our present business prosperity continues indefinitely without any set-back, public or charitable agencies will be forced in the long run to assume the maintenance of many thousands of workers whose employers had led them to expect that they would be granted pensions in their old age.

Need for Old Age Assistance Growing

The Commission is convinced that the constantly changing conditions in most industrial communities are markedly and steadily shortening the average working-life of the great mass of men and women engaged in industry. The average amount of savings accumulated by the wage-earner who has been retired from his job, is not sufficient to maintain him in old age.

Problem of Pennsylvania's Aged Cannot be Ignored For Long

(2) Regarding the conditions of the aged and the pension movement in this State, the Commission has found nothing to justify it to alter the recommendations made in previous reports. On the contrary, as the years go by, the necessity and superiority of some constructive program along the lines previously recommended becomes clearer and more evident. Even if it should be granted that all of us are now sharing the blessings of the prosperity and high wages of the last few years, it must be admitted that this has been going on so far for but a very few years and that, the aged, for whom there is but a small place in modern industry, had benefitted little of these prosperous times. We find that the problem is pressing today and Pennsylvania's costly and antiquated system of poor-relief stands indicted for almost a century. We must, therefore, re-affirm the statement made in a previous Commission's report submitted to the General Assembly of 1921 that: "it is our conviction that the problem of the aged can no longer be ignored. We believe that the present time is a proper and propitious one for State action in regard to its old persons." Any legal or constitutional difficulties in the way, must be overcome at the earliest possible moment and a constructive and suitable program adopted.

State Legislatures That Have Already Passed Old Age Pension Bills

(3) With reference to the pension movement in the United States, we find that although the question was given little consideration ten or twelve years ago, eight legislatures and the Territory of Alaska since that time had adopted old age pension plans, while at the present time such laws are on the statute books of Montana, Nevada, Wisconsin, Kentucky and the Territory of Alaska. The disclosures of the actual operation of the law in Montana are most significant. The advantages of an old age pension plan over the older system of poor relief is shown vividly in this report.

Pension cost in Montana Only A Little Over 2 Cents A Month Per Capita

The estimates made by the Pennsylvania Old Age Assistance Commission regarding the numbers of pensioners in Pennsylvania who would have qualified under the Old Age Assistance Act of 1923 was calculated to amount to 3.3 per 1,000 of the total population in the State. The Montana disclosures indicate, however, that during the entire three years of the existence of the plan, the total number of applicants, in the counties which have been operating under the law, did not amount to even 2.5 per 1.000 population. The total number of pensions granted during these three years does not exceed much above 2 per 1,000 population, while the number now actually in receipt of pensions amounts to but 1.4 per 1,000 of the total population of that State. Although the maximum pension allowed by law is set at $300 a year, the average pension actually paid in 1925 amounted to but $157.82 per year, or $3.03 per week. The total per capita outlay by Montana citizens on the total pensions in 1925 amounted to but 27 cents a year, or a little over two cents a month per capita.

Cost Per Almshouse Inmate $15.22 Weekly

When these expenditures for pensions are contrasted with the sums actually spent on the almshouses in Montana, the superiority of the pension system stands out beyond all doubt. According to a report of the United States Department of Labor, the annual maintenance cost per inmate for all the institutions studied amounted to $518.91, while the average cost of maintaining an inmate in 12 of the 22 almhouses in Montana amounted to $791.70 a year, or $15.22 per week per inmate as against the $3.03 a week spent per pensioner. In other words, the cost of maintaining an inmate in all the Montana poorfarms amounts to approximately three and one-half times the amount it costs to support a pensioner in his own home, while in most of the Montana almshouses it actually costs more than five times to keep a person in the county poorfarm than to pension him.

The further fact, as revealed by the county commissioners of Montana to the Commission, that with hardly any exception, aged persons in that State always prefer to accept the meager pension grant to life in an almshouse even at a greater cost, would seem to be conclusive proof of both the efficiency and desirability of an old age pension plan.

China, India and the United States Still Remain Without Effective Provisions For the Aged

(4) Our studies of pension plans in foreign countries show that during the last quarter century, practically every civilized nation in the world has either already adopted a carefully worked out system of old age provision or is contemplating such in the near future. About 650,000,000 persons are now already protected with one form or another of modern insurance or pension provisions against the economic hazards of old age. Indeed, of the populous countries still remaining without any form of constructive care for the aged, only China, India and the United States are left. Of the industrially developed nations, the United States, as a unit, stands alone in its isolation in still applying early Seventeenth Century methods to Twentieth Century problems.

Employers in Pennsylvania Favor Assistance To The Aged

(5) The canvass of opinions as to the views held in regard to this question by Pennsylvania's leading industrial and business leaders shows that, on the whole, there is among large employers of labor a general recognition of the present wants of the aged and of the necessity of a more humane, more economical and more equiptable method of care of this class of dependents. While a few executives, who though easily adaptable to industrial and business changes in their own particular business, argue that in social legislation what is, is good, and, regardless of all cost, refuse to recognize the needs of a change in social policy, we find these to be the exceptions and not at all representative of the views held by the majority of our industrial and business groups. Our canvass evidences that the overwhelming opinion among leaders of our Pennsylvania businesses and industries is definitely in favor of some measure of state action along a modern program of aged care.

That there should be a difference of opinion as to which is the best method to be followed, is both natural and fortunate. There is certainly no monopoly on the best plan to be followed. The subject must be studied most carefully and appropriate legislation should be framed only after thorough investigation of every phase of the question. The possibilities of this are discussed at greater length in the inside pages of this report. At this juncture it is sufficient to point out that a well worked out plan of State action will actually meet with the hearty approval of the great mass of our businessmen, industrial leaders and workers who are at the present time individually and ineffectively groping for a solution of their own particular problems of the aged.

The Contributory Plan

(6) The working out of a contributory system is concretely shown by the estimates presented by the Commission's actuary. These show that from an actuarial and insurance viewpoint, the inauguration of such a system of deferred annuities presents no serious difficulties. The administration of such a plan, however, does present far greater and more complex problems.

Recommendations

(1) Inasmuch as under any workable plan that could be devised for meeting the immediately pressing and dire needs of some of the aged, temporary assistance from the State would be necessary, we respectfully recommend to the General Assembly of 1927 the second passage of Joint Resolution No. 6-A adopted by the 1925 Legislature providing that Article Three of the Pennsylvania Constitution be amended by adding thereto the following:

"Section 35. The General Assembly may by general law make appropriations of money for assistance to aged indigent residents of the Commonwealth."

(2) In order to permit the State to undertake proper action, we further recommend the approval of this constitutional amendment by the citizens of the Commonwealth.

(3) In accordance with the specific request of the General Assembly, we are reporting on the "practicability and feasibility of a contributory system" of old age insurance. The legislature has not instructed us to draft appropriate legislation and we have not done so, although we are convinced that for the very welfare of the State an adequate legislative solution of the problem—if not directly through the instrumentality of the State, then by some form of collective, civic or indirect State system of supervision—must be found without delay. Because of the numerous complexities involved, we recommend the further study of the administrative phase of the subject either through a continuation of the same Commission, or through another body, so as to make possible the framing of the most practicable and suitable measure. The Commission is hopeful that its previous and present investigations have been instrumental in clarifying many of the mooted points in this question. Additional study, it believes, will be fruitful in making it possible to evolve a plan whereby the varied needs and interests of this great Commonwealth will best be met. Special consideration might profitably be given in such a study to a plan which would embody the principle of direct contributions on the part of the beneficiaries, but which at the same time would not involve the setting up of a top-heavy system of administration.

Conclusions

After thorough and detailed study of all the above problems, this Commission cannot over emphasize its conviction of the immediate necessity of a constructive plan of state action. It is our unanimous belief that a state system of old age pensions or insurance is by far superior, from every point of view, to any of the existing forms of aged relief. The problem of the indigent aged is being met today in a way that is thoroughly inadequate to merit its continuance. We believe that a plan can be worked out which while it would bring contentment and happiness in the later years of the aged dependents, would prove more beneficial from a humane and social point of view, would work out more economically from the viewpoint of our taxpayers and, would meet with general approval.

Chapter I

The Old Age Pension Movement in Pennsylvania

OLD AGE PENSIONS vs. THE THREE-HUNDRED YEARS OLD POOR RELIEF SYSTEM

The present system of poor relief in Pennsylvania dates back to the original poor laws adopted in England by Queen Elizabeth in the year 1601. The poor laws in force in the Keystone State at the present time are identical in principle and almost identical in language with the famous laws of Queen Elizabeth. In 1925, there were in Pennsylvania 583 separate poor districts under eight different systems of administration. For nearly a century, every commission delegated to study the problem attacked our antiquated system of poor relief and censured our endless and jumbling tendency of local legislation of poor laws. Beginning with the Report of the Commission of 1833, our method of care of the poor and indigent have been criticized and condemned by every official report bearing on the subject.

Poor Law Now Recognized as Inadequate For Other Classes of Dependents

As the defects of our poor relief system have become gradually recognized, the various classes of dependents are slowly but surely being taken out of its province and are taken care of under more humane and up-to-date methods. In the early days, the almshouse was the refuge place for a heterogeneous collection of insane, feeble-minded, orphans, mothers of illegitimate children, criminals, prostitutes, epileptics and sufferers from chronic diseases. While in some instances such conditions still exist, we are gradually taking away from the almshouse the orphans, through the Mothers' Assistance Fund; the insane, through our properly equipped State owned mental hospitals; the feeble-minded into special institutions for the feeble-minded, and the epileptics into institutions of their own. The only class of unfortunates for whom the Elizabethan Poor law system has, until recently, been considered still fully adequate are the worthy and respectable aged persons, who after a lifetime of toil and services, have become dependent through circumstances over which they exercised little or no control.

First Legislative Proposal in Behalf of the Indigent Aged

Up to the year 1917 there can be found no traces of any suggestion in the Pennsylvania Legislature for a better method of care of the indigent aged outside the ancient system of poor relief. In that year, Representative James H. Maurer of Reading, introduced a bill "Providing for the establishment of an old age assistance bureau to be conducted under the supervision of the Commissioner of Labor and Industry." This bill, in the main, sought the granting of an allowance of $5.00 a week to a single person and $8.00 a week to a married couple to all persons 60 years of age and over who were "unable to work and without means to live." The funds were to come out of a $500,000 appropriation which the bill asked to be specifically appropriated to the Old Age Assistance Bureau in the Department of Labor and Industry.

Creation of First Commission to Study Old Age Pensions

While the above bill made little headway, the Keystone State took official cognizance of the problem of the dependent aged in that year, through Joint Resolution No. 413, sponsored by former Governor William C. Sproul, who was then a member of the State Senate. This resolution provided for the appointment of a Commission:

"To consist of seven reputable citizens of Pennsylvania .....to look into the general subject of old age pensions, and to investigate the various systems provided for this purpose in other nations and states, together with all the facts relating thereto, especially as bearing upon the industrial and other conditions prevailing in Pennsylvania, and with a view to their practical adaptability here."

Findings of the First Commission

In accordance with the provisions of the above resolution, Governor Martin G. Brumbaugh early in 1918 appointed the first Commission to investigate the subject of old age pensions. This Commission made a most comprehensive report of its investigations to the 1919 General Assembly. In its report, the Commission presented the facts in regard to nativity, family connections, physical conditions, cause of disability, occupation engaged in, wages earned, sources of income, means of outside support, etc., gathered from interviewing 3,405 inmates, 50 years of age and over, in 60 almshouses in the State. The report also contained full statistics and like information in regard to 2,170 inmates of 65 fraternal and benevolent homes for the aged in the State. Considerable information was included concerning nearly 500 aged recipients of private relief agencies. Interesting facts were also presented with refernce to aged persons, 50 years of age and over, in the State in general. The latter were ascertained from personal interviews held with nearly 4,500 aged men and women in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Reading.

Chief Causes of Old Age Dependency

The following are brief summaries of the findings of the Old Age Pension Commission:

In regard to family connections, it was found, that while of those in the almshouses 40 per cent were single, 17 per cent married and 39 per cent widowed, the proportions among the aged who reside in their homes were five and one-half per cent single, 55 per cent married and 33 per cent widowed. It was also disclosed that while among the aged paupers sixty-three and one-half per cent had no children living, only 10.6 per cent of the old folks living at home had no children living.

Again, of the 3,405 aged almshouse inmates, only 436, or less than 13 per cent, were found in sound or fair health; while among those who were not dependent upon charity 64 per cent were still found to be in sound or fair health.

This warranted the Commission to conclude that the radical differences in family connections and physical well-being are largely accountable for the fact that some persons must seek the poorhouse in old age, while others remain presumably non-dependent.

The Commissions findings also disclosed that very few old men remain at work at their habitual occupations. It was found that many of the old had their earning power impaired entirely when reaching old age. Of the almshouse inmates, it was found that 73 per cent earned less than $12 per week before they were admitted to the institution. Even among the non-dependent old people, 27 per cent had to cease regular work before they had attained the age of 50, while 35 per cent more quit work between the ages of 50 and 60.

Possessions of the Aged

As to the property possessions of the aged in Pennsylvania, it was found that but few aged persons in the State are possessed of same. Only five and one-half per cent of the paupers investigated claimed to have property above debts at any time, while of the old persons in the State in general, 38 per cent claimed to have had some property of their own. Sixty-two per cent of the latter had no property possessions. Furthermore, forty-three per cent of the aged population investigated in their own homes had no other means of support outside their own earnings upon reaching old age.

The Antiquated Almshouse

Following the Commission's study of 82 county and local poorhouses it concluded that:

1. Our poorhouses are organized and maintained on the principle of charity.
2. The heads of these institutions are largely political appointees and very few have had experience in their work previous to their appointment.
3. Many of the men connected with the management of the almshouses are prejudiced against their unfortunate inmates and are often without the rudiments of an education which would fit them for their responsibilities.
4. Life in an almshouse is dull, depressing, restricted, and, to say the least, not an inviting place to spend one's last days.
5. In many county poorhouses the worthy, but unfortunate, aged wage-earners are compelled, after a life of valuable service, to live and even eat at the same table with the insane, feebleminded and epileptics, blind and deaf, sufferers from chronic diseases, persons with criminal records, and prostitutes.

The Commission further declared that only in rare instances do the almshouses provide real care for the sick. One sees no happy faces in our almshouses. In almost no place is there provision made for recreation and entertainment and for the maintenance of interest among the inmates in order to keep them from brooding. The inmates are given mostly coarse and unpalatable food, although the overseers themselves manage to fare somewhat better. This was shown conspicuously in some of the following annual food rations provided for the inmates' table and that of the supervisors' in one county almshouse.

Food Rations Provided Annually for the Inmates and the Supervisors of One County Almshouse in Pennsylvania

Articles of Food	Per Inmate	Per Steward
Butter	7½ pounds	30 pounds
Egg	38	200
Chicken	1 ounce	10 pounds
Milk	23 quarts	101 quarts

Inadequacy of Other Means of Relief

The Old Age Pension Commission also made an exhaustive study of all the existing means of relief for the aged and found these to be extremely inadequate. The Commission found only 20 large concerns in Pennsylvania which had established regular systems of pensions for their aged workers. In 1917-18, the total number of perssons in this State in receipt of industrial pensions was 2,052, the total number of railroad pensioners in Pennsylvania, during the same period was approximately 3,600. Of nearly 50,000 teachers in the State there were only 620 receiving old age pensions in 1918. In addition, 852 policemen, 514 firemen and 293 general municipal employees were receiving pensions from the various municipalities. Of all the fraternal and trade union organizations in Pennsylvania, only about 100 were receiving old age benefits. The total number of wage-workers and salaried persons on pension lists in Pennsylvania in 1918 hardly reached 10,000, which was less than 3 per cent of the persons 65 years of age and over in the State.

Commission Continued by 1919 Legislature

The Commission, in its report to the 1919 Legislature, did not make any definite recommendations as to remedial measures to be adopted because it considered its investigations still incomplete and desired more time to complete its studies. It could not, at that time, decide as to what would be the best plan to suggest which would warrant its enactment into law by the State. It, therefore, urged further study of the problem.

In compliance with this request, the General Assembly of 1919, by Joint Resolution No. 383-A, provided for the continuation of the Commission and further directed this Commission "to make report and recommendations to the General Assembly of One Thousand Nine Hundred and Twenty-one."

Commission's Report 1919-21

After two years of exhaustive studies of the various old age pension systems, the Commission drafted an old age assistance bill which was introduced in the 1921 Legislature by Senator Max G. Leslie. Speaking of the Leslie bill, the Commission, in its report to the 1921 Legislature declared:

In presenting this bill we wish to state that it is our sincere conviction that the problems of the aged can no longer be ignored. We believe that the present time is a propitious one for State action in regard to its old persons. To protect the aged by means of a constructive social policy represents no longer a legislative innovation, nor is it an Utopian experiment. Nearly 30 countries, including all the industrial nations of the world, have already enacted such legislation. Many of these have had such systems for a number of years, and it is important to note that not one nation has yet returned to the earlier and haphazard method of individual relief. Indeed, the tendencies in every country are to extend and liberalize the old age protection system now in operation.

After a thorough study of the various old age insurance systems now in operation, we are convinced that a non-contributory assistance plan is a feasible plan which can be successfully established in Pennsylvania.

The Old Age Assistance Act of 1923

The Leslie Bill made little progress in the General Assembly of 1921. As a result, the Bill, with only slight changes in its provisions, was reintroduced in the 1923 Legislature by Senator Wm. S Vare. It was enacted by a vote of 131 against 29 in the House of Representatives and 35 against 9 in the Senate. The Act, with appropriate ceremonies, was signed by Governor Gifford Pinchot on May 10, 1923.

Who were Entitled to Old Age Assistance

Briefly, the Old Age Assistance Act (P. L. 141, 1923) provided for the granting of assistance to persons seventy years of age or over who qualified under the following provisions:

(a) That they have been citizens of the United States for at least fifteen years.

(b) That they have been continuous residents of the State of Pennsylvania for at least fifteen years immediately preceding the date of application; (continuous residence was not deemed interrupted if the total period of absence from the State did not exceed three years) or,

(c) That they resided in Pennsylvania a total of forty years, at least five of which have immediately preceded the application.

(d) That their income from all sources was below $1 per day.

(e) That their property valuation did not exceed $3,000. (The property of both husband and wife, when living together was to be figured as if it were that of one person.)

(f) That at the date of application, they were not inmates of either prisons, jails, workhouses, insane asylums, or any other public reform or correctional institution.

(g) That for six months or more, during the fifteen years preceding the date of application, they have not deserted their wives or husbands without just cause and failed to support such of their children as were under age.

(h) That within the year preceding the application for assistance they have not been professional tramps or beggars.

(i) That they have no children or other person responsible for their support under the laws of the State and able to do so.

Amount of Assistance

The Act also provided that "the amount of assistance shall be fixed with due regard to the condition in each case, but in no case shall it be an amount, which when added to the income of the applicant from all other sources shall exceed a total of one dollar a day."

How the Law was Administered

The law was administered for the State by a Commission of three who were appointed by the Governor, and by local County Old Age Assistance Boards who were appointed by the County Commissioners in each respective county. All members served without pay, except that in the case of the Old Age Assistance Commission each member received as compensation ten dollars per diem while actually engaged in the business of the Commission. All payments for assistance, and all expenses incurred by the Commission were paid by the State Treasurer, while all expenses incurred by the county boards were paid by the respective county treasurers from the moneys of the county. An appropriation of $25,000 for the two fiscal years was made to the Old Age Assistance Commission by the 1923 Legislature.

Members of the Commission

Early in August, 1923, Governor Gifford Pinchot appointed to the Old Age Assistance Commission, Mrs. Mary V. Grice, Philadelphia, Messrs. David S. Ludlum, Devon, and James H. Maurer, Reading, all members of the previous investigating Commissions. At its first meeting the Commission appointed Andrew P. Bower, Reading, as Superintendent and Abraham Epstein, Director of Research of the previous Old Age Pension Commissions, as its Executive Secretary.

What Commission Endeavored To Do

Prevented from the granting of assistance by the meager appropriations, the Commission concentrated all its energies upon establishing the machinery provided under the law in order to ascertain definitely as to the number and character of those who would be entitled to this assistance and the amount this would cost the State. Thuswise, the Commission hoped to settle, if possible, the mooted question regarding the number of aged persons in Pennsylvania who would qualify under the law and the amount this would cost the State.

Forty-five County Boards Organized

Despite the lack of funds and the filing of court proceedings questioning the constitutionality of the Old Age Assistance Act, the Commission succeeded in organizing the following forty-five of the sixty-seven counties in the State: Adams, Beaver, Bedford, Berks, Bradford, Butler, Cambria, Cameron, Centre, Chester, Clarion, Clearfield, Clinton, Columbia, Crawford, Erie, Fayette, Fulton, Greene, Huntingdon, Indiana, Jefferson, Lackawanna, Lawrence, Lycoming, McKean, Mercer, Mifflin, Monroe, Montour, Northumberland, Perry, Pike, Potter, Snyder, Somerset, Sullivan, Susquehanna, Tioga, Union, Venago, Warren, Washington, Westmoreland and York.

Thirty-eight of these county boards received up to November, 1924, a total of 3,347 applications. At a negligible expense to the county, and practically none to the State, these boards were able to decide definitely upon 2,138 of these applications.

What the Applications of the Aged Disclosed

In summarizing the disclosures of the facts as submitted by nearly 2,400 aged applicants in the State, the Commission in its letter of transmittal of its Report to the 1925 General Assembly declared:

Our studies of the aged men and women who have applied for assistance under the Old Age Assistance Act bear out fully the crying need for effective old age provision in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

(1) Although 90 per cent of the applicants are native born, the average total possessions of the applicants examined is less than $24 per person while the average amount of savings is only $6.75 per applicant.

(2) Three out of every four applicants are without any remunerative occupation and dependent for support.

(3) While the children of the applicants, in however humble conditions, were generally found to make every effort to support their parents, these children were in many instances in no position to do so because of the inadequacy of their own income and the size of their families. Not frequently these parents were supported at the expense of their own children's welfare.

(4) Many aged men and women who have no children to help them are already supported either by their respective poor districts, private charity organizations, or private individuals—in other words, with moneys coming from the taxpayers.

(5) That many of the aged, with but slight assistance from the State, could find adequate homes have been fully brought out by our investigation.

(6) A perusal of our findings will prove conclusively that in the great majority of instances the failure to adequately protect themselves in old age was not due to individual maladjustment or "blame", but were a result of conditions and circumstances over which these unfortunate aged had no control. This is fully supported by the statements of facts, the testimonials of the county boards and the former employers of the applicants.

(7) Neither the almshouse nor the present system of our outdoor poor relief adequately meet the needs of these worthy aged. They are costly both financially and spiritually. An effective state assistance system appeals to us as the only adequate alternative under present conditions.

(8) Old age pension systems abroad are meeting with the hearty approval of their people and are spreading everywhere.

(9) That the everwhelming majority of public opinion in Pennsylvania is insistent upon a fitting old age assistance plan is fully borne out by the editorial comments, letters from employers and the proceedings of the Old Age Assistance Conference held on November 13, 1924.

The opponents of this law have broadcast information throughout the State that the present law would cost the State at least $25,000,000 a year. Inasmuch as they do not at all present any figures supporting this ridiculous sum, we unhesitatingly and categorically declare these figures to be without foundation or reason.

Based upon as accurate and scientific figures as are ascertainable, we find that even if every aged person in the State, qualified under law, would be given assistance, the cost would not amount to more than, approximately, $5,000,000 a year, or about 57 cents for each citizen in the State. This is a big sum of money until it is recalled that for this sum we would be able to take care of three times the number of persons now taken care of in our almshouses which expenditures, if everything be included, amount to at least $8,000,000 a year. We firmly believe that there is not a citizen in this Commonwealth who would not rather be willing to pay his 57 cents, which is but 56 cents per $1,000 taxable and only 24 cents per $1,000 wealth of the State—even if these were additional, which happily is not the case—than be responsible for the tragedies and heart-breaks now caused by the prospect of the poorhouse after a lifetime of toil and service.

Furthermore, of the approximately $6,200,000 cash spent on our almshouses in the year 1922, at least $3,000,000 of the total was spent on the administration of the system; only about half going directly to the inmates. It took over 1,000 paid employes to look after the 8,000 inmates of our almshouses. These institutions also report a value of land, building and equipment of over $16,000,000, and own over 17,000 acres of land of which more than 10,000 were reported to be under cultivation.

Even under liberal estimates, we are convinced, from studies of the facts, that under the present law a fund of $5,000,000 a year would not require for administrative expenses—for both State and counties—a sum to exceed $300,000 per year, which is but six per cent of the total as against almost fifty per cent under the county almshouse system. The cost for investigation per applicant in the 26 counties from which figures were obtained shows that the average cost per applicant amounts to $1.04, or less than 41 cents per $100 allowed.

We are deeply aggrieved that we were unable to come to the assistance of at least some of our worthy aged. Perhaps the earthly lives of some of those already gone to their eternal rest could have been somewhat prolonged even with the meager appropriations allowed us by the last Legislature. We know that by placing the Old Age Assistance Act on the statute books, the sunset days of the aged were made brighter with renewed hope for the future. The court proceedings against the constitutionality of the Act, however, blocked our plans and shattered our hopes in that direction. No doubt by the time this is read, the State Supreme Court will have rendered its decision on the question of the constitutionality of the Old Age Assistance Act. We trust the law will be sustained. But, regardless of the legal or technical points involved, we are convinced that, as representatives of the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, you are fully conscious of the need of this beneficent law. The findings in this report have proven this. We are confident that once the facts are familiar, the thousands of our loyal, aged citizens whose hopes have been so much encouraged will not be forsaken and immediate assistance will be provided for them. This is our cherished hope and prayer.

The Pennsylvania Conference on Old Age Assistance

On November 13, 1924, the State Old Age Assistance Commission held a conference on Old Age Assistance in the first of its kind in the United States. This meeting was attended by over 200 persons representing about 30 of the leading organizations in the State. There were present also delegates from the county old age assistance boards as well as representatives of six other States.

Findings in Lycoming County

Speaking of the applications received by their Board, James F. Collier, Chairman of the Lycoming County Old Age Assistance Board declared:

It is said by a life insurance company that the laws of averages work out very nicely in 100 lives, and as your Board from my County have acted in 99 lives, we feel rather certain that it will give a pretty fair idea of conditions. We find that of these 99, 87 were approved, 11 were rejected and one was withdrawn. We also find that three have answered that last summons since making application, and we sincerely turst that they have found a home better than the one they had on this earth. The average amount of assistance granted each applicant per month is $24.36. We find that there were 97 white people and one Negro; 71 of these were men and 27 were women.

"Rewarding the Shiftless"

The argument that this Act would reward the shiftless and unworthy is absolutely without foundation and contrary to the facts. First, no shiftless and unworthy have applied in Lycoming County. Were any such to apply, their claims would be investigated; and if found to have no means of support and no children able to care for them, no doubt they would be afforded assistance, as they would become public charges if denied such assistance under the Act and sent to the almshouse to be supported out of the public moneys at a possibly greater cost than that offered by the Old Age Assistance law. Furthermore, it is the case in Lycoming County as, no doubt, it is the case in other counties, that the Assistance Board has been organized by placing a man in the western end of the county, one in the central part of the county, and another in the eastern end. These men from their very long residence in their locality are acquainted with practically all of the applicants, and those whom they did not know a great deal about, they made inquiries concerning, thereby removing the possibility of caring for shiftless persons.

Right here, let me ask if we must neglect people in their old age because they happen to be shiftless in early life? Is it charitable to permit a man or woman to die of want because they happen to make some mistakes in their earlier lives?

Speaking of charity, I feel that if a man or woman were totally devoid of such a quality, and he made a trip of investigation with the members of the Lycoming County Board, he or she would have generated in them some of this virtue of charity before they had finished.....Very often a great many of us use the word shiftless when the word unfortunate would be more to the point; and right here I wish to make a statement concerning an ex-member of our Legislature who served a term here in Harrisburg as a member of the House and who is now applying for Old Age Assistance. The man is eighty years old. I have personally known him for a quarter of a century and I know that he endeavored to do what he could during his life in order that he might have some accumulation for old age, but 80 years is quite a while to round out, and now he finds himself and his wife in destitute circumstances, he being too old to work although he has tried to work within the last year, and who will dare say that this man was shiftless?

Now with respect to reckless spending of the grant by the beneficiaries, I ask any one here if there could be any reckless spending from $1.00 per day? I am informed by the Deputy Sheriff of Lycoming County that it costs 50 cents per day to keep the prisoners, people who have committed sins against society. Yet this Act only allows a maximum of $1.00 a day from which the recipient must pay rent, heat, light, medicine and live. To my mind this argument of reckless spending is simply absurd. The grant is not of sufficient largeness to admit of reckless spending.

Character of the Applicants

Judging from the character of applicants received by the Lycoming County Board, they have, without exception, been persons who never were addicted to reckless spending. The contention is further made by the opponents of this Act that it would remove the burden of support from children who are able but unwilling to support their parents. You will note that we handled cases of this kind in Williamsport and rejected a man because his children were able to support him, and we also notified the children of our action. Another case, which we held up on account of feeling that the son of the applicant was able to support his parent, was taken up with the son. He wrote us to remove the applicant, feeling no doubt that he intended to try to take care of his old parent, but a personal investigation made by the Lycoming County Board proved that this man was unable to take care of his father.

You will, therefore, see, ladies and gentlemen, that at least one County in this Commonwealth has proved by earnest, insistent, conscientious, careful and painstaking investigation that this Old Age Assistance Law would not reward the shiftless and unworthy; it would not remove the burden of support from children who are able but unwilling to support their parents; and, above all, it would not cause reckless spending of the grant by the beneficiaries. We are positive that when the balance of the aged poor in Lycoming County have been located, the same conditions will prevail amongst them as has prevailed amongst the first hundred.

Conditions in Beaver County

Mrs. W. B. Gray, Secretary of the Beaver County Old Age Assistance Board addressed the Conference as follows:

From my experience with over 100 applicants, most of whom I have investigated personally, I find that a great many of these had no education and never learned a trade, and when they became old, the manufacturers found no place for them. Their children are married and scattered, each struggling to maintain their own existence and unable to assist their aged parents.

Typical Cases

I have had an application of a man who worked twenty-eight years in the steel plant. Without any notice whatsoever he was told one day that his services were no longer needed. He expected to be pensioned in two years. Imagine the disappointment of that man! He had worked for small wages, had a large family, his sons and daughters were married and have all they can do to maintain their own homes. He is failing in health and too old to get work. It is for people of this kind that Beaver County is willing to work and fight for an adequate old age assistance plan.

Another old lady who was left a widow with a large family to take care of, has four daughters, who are all widows with large families of their own; one son a cripple, one an invalid and not one able to contribute a dollar toward her support. She is past seventy and is not able to do any work. We say the county home is no place for this woman. A little old age assistance would help to provide her with, at least, one room which would be a real home.

Comparative Almshouse and Pension Costs in Washington County

Mrs. Janet Workman, Secretary of the Washington County Old Age Assistance Board, stated:

The general impression that our poor houses represent the cheapest and most economical method of care of the dependent aged is certainly without foundation.

The only explanation of this belief is the fact that, until very recently there was no adequete system of accounting provided in calculating the cost of maintaining the poor. As the Old Age Pension Commission stated in its 1919 report: "The State supervision of these aged homes is insufficient, loose and hardly competent. Careful records are kept in only few institutions. There is no uniform method of accounting. Computations of costs are made in almost as many forms and methods as the men making them. Many of the per capita costs of almshouses given in the reports of the Board of Public Charities do not represent the actual cost. The latter do not include the interest upon the permanent investment and, in many cases, do not include the value of the farm products."

Almshouse Costs in Washington County

Thus, for instance, in the case of my own county, the Commission found that while the average per capita per week in 1917, as given by the poor directors to the Board of Public Charities, was $2.03, the Commission's figures based on the total expenditures made that year and divided by the number of days support in the institution showed a weekly expenditure of $8.76 per capita, or approximately $35.00 per month.

In 1923, the average daily per capita cost in Washington County is reported to the Department of Public Welfare as amounting to 76 cents, or $5.32 per week. That this figure, however, does not represent the real cost to the county of supporting an inmate in our county home is clearly apparent when it is noted that in the total almshouse expense of $67,934.30, as given by the Directors of the Poor of that year, no item of the produce raised on the county farm and consumed in the home is included. Obviously, the fact that 150 acres of farm land are under cultivation and that but little of the products raised are sold outside, would, if properly accounted, add considerably to the total expenditures.

Actual Weekly Cost

Furthermore, no mention is made in this total in regard to the interest upon the permanent investment involved, which although from the viewpoint of any sound business man must always be reckoned as part of the expenditures, seem at no time to be considered in the case of our county institutions. The investments embodied in the land and buildings of our county farm are estimated at least, at $350,000. Even five per cent interest on this investment gives a total of $17,500 per year, which must be added to the expenditures of the county home. When this is divided by the 211 inmates in the home, $83.00 per year, or $1.59 per week, must be added to the per capita cost of every inmate. Thus, the total weekly per capita cost of supporting an inmate in the Washington County Home, with only five per cent interest on the permanent investment added, but no account still being taken of the food consumed from the County Farm, amounts really to $6.91 or in round figures, $7.00 per week, rather than the $5.32 given by the County Controller. It is this price, at least, that we pay for separating an aged man from his beloved wife and for imposing the odious stigma of pauperism upon him. And it is this $7.00 weekly per capita cost in our almshouse that we must contrast with the average allowance of $21.43 per month per applicant, made so far by our county old age assistance board.

Overhead Charges

Again, in 1923, accoding to the report submitted by the Directors of the Poor to the Department of Public Welfare, $14,538.00 of a total almshouse expense of $67,934.30, or practically 21.5 per cent, was spent on "salaries and expenses" alone, exclusive of all other overhead charges; in other words, $21.50 of every $100.00 appropriated for the poor in the almshouse was spent in paying the men for delivering this money. In the five months our Board has been in existence, we spent, up to October 10th, a total overhead expense of $12.70. For this munificent sum, we have been able to check up and to act upon 70 applications, most of which need not be re-investigated when money becomes available, granting allowances to 61 persons, up to a total of $15,684.00 per year. Thus, under the old age assistance act, we have been able to carry on our business at an overhead expense to the county of less than eight cents per hundred dollars distributed, while in the case of the almshouse, this same overhead is $21.48 per hundred dollars, or 268 times as much. The State's expense in administrating this money from that end, judging from the budget asked by the Commission for the next biennium, is actually below what it costs the State today in supervising the county homes through the Bureau of Maintenance in the Department of Public Welfare.

I am not citing the above figures as of peculiar credit to our County Board. I have no doubt that approximately the same small overhead percentages exist in a number of other counties. I am referring to these only to show that they are inherent in the Old Age Assistance Act. Once the State adopts a more just method of treatment of the less fortunate members of society, there will always be plenty of persons who will gladly and cheerfully assume duties and burdens and give as much of their time and energies as possible, regardless of financial considerations. It is one thing to be a Director of the Poor and be compelled to shatter the lives of aged persons by sending them to almshouses, but one is honored as a member of a county Old Age Assistance Board, through which he or she can help to make the declining days of an aged person somewhat happier. Thus, the Old Age Assistance Act is not only a superior and more humanely just instrument of meeting the needs of the dependent aged than the antiquated poorhouse, but it is even economically a far less expensive method.

Constitutionality of Old Age Assistance act Questioned

As already referred to, hardly did the Old Age Assistance Commission manage to complete its organization when a Bill of Complaint was filed praying for an injunction to restrain the State Commission and the fiscal officers of the State from "making disbursements involving the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in great expense to the irreparable injury of ourselves and other taxpayers."

Arguments of the Complainants

The complainants argued that in addition to violating Section 18 of Article III of the Pennsylvania Constitution which provides that: "No appropriations, except for pensions or gratuities for military services, shall be made for charitable, educational or benevolent purposes, to any person or community nor to any denominational or sectarian institution, corporation or Association," the law grants the Commission arbitrary powers in making grants and is, therefore, an improper delegation of legislative power; that it is discriminatory in its age limit and other qualifications, and, therefore, violates the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States which prohibits any State from denying to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law; that the Act violates the Constitution in granting special privileges and that it is appropriating public money for a private purpose.

At the hearing before the Dauphin County Judges, and in their extensive brief, the complainants further attacked the law as "bordering on a new form of outrageous socialism;" characterized it as "grotesque, full of absurdities, and a 'jig-saw' puzzle," and argued that the Act is a "distinctive step toward centralization and toward making thriftless and laziness genteel."

Contentions of the State

The State's Attorney General through Deputy Attorney General Philip S. Moyer, in defending the case, argued that the constitutional restrictions regarding benevolent appropriations, as shown conclusively throughout the debates at the Constitutional Convention, were not intended for the purposes contended by the complainants but were inserted for the purpose of preventing the steady flow of calamity bills which were prevalent at that period. The State, Mr. Moyer pointed out, has repeatedly appropriated money to certain definite classes of dependents. As to the wisdom and merits of the law, the State expostulated that it is not for the court to pass upon, the latter being solely the prerogative of the legislative branch.

Decision of the Dauphin County Court

On August 4, 1924, the Dauphin County Court rendered a decision declaring the Pennsylvania Old Age Assistance Act unconstitutional. In this opinion, Presiding Judge William M. Hargest, declared:

Whether or not this legislation is beneficial or whether it is paternalism and a vicious usurpation by the Government of a quasi-fatherly relation to the citizen and his family .....can not concern us. Our single inquiry must be whether it is prohibited by the constitution itself. It is with these principles in mind that we approach the consideration of this question.

The question before us is whether the old age assistance provided by this statute involves an appropriation for charitable or benevolent purposes and whether the prohibition to any person includes a prohibition to a class of persons through the agency of a commission.

After finding the act allowing "benevolences to a person," the court states further:

The money for this purpose is appropriated by the Commonwealth. This certainly is a kindness towards persons in old age. This Act manifests a desire to do good; it indicates a love toward mankind; an effort to promote happiness; in fact, it comes within all of the definitions of benevolence. The appropriations must, therefore, be characterized as one for a benevolent purpose. Is it not within the class of appropriations for benevolent purposes which Section 18 of Article III of the Constitution prohibits? The prohibition is against any appropriation for charitable, educational or benevolent purposes to any person or community....

If we are right in our conclusions that the prohibition for benevolence to any person is as broad as the language plainly indicates, then we say there is not a syllable in the Constitution which authorized a system of benevolence through a State Department or agency, for the care and maintenance of aged indigent residents of the State. This argument is tantamount to saying that the Legislature can pass a law to do the thing indirectly which the Constitution prohibits it from doing directly. If appropriations can be made to a Commission the purpose of which is to distribute benevolence to aged indigent persons, it is accomplishing exactly what the Constitution says cannot be done, namely, making an appropriation for benevolent purposes to certain persons.....

Pennsylvania has recognized its inherent duty to care for its poor. Its system had been in operation many years when the Constitution of 1874 was framed. That system provided for poor districts, poor directors and overseers, and for the relief of paupers as a matter of local concern. Those who framed the Constitution understood it, and no word is contained in the Constitution with reference to it. The system was left untouched. If there had been any purpose to change that system, some word indicating that purpose would have been found in the Constitution. If it had been intended that direct appropriations might be made out of the State Treasury for the relief of the poor, some provision evidencing such intention, which would create so radical a change in the governmental policy in this regard, would have been inserted in the Constitution. The conclusion is, therefore, irrestible that a direct appropriation from the State Treasury to any person or class of persons, cannot be sustained on the theory that it is a discharge of the inherent obligation of the State to take care of its paupers....

Appeal Taken to State Supreme Court

An appeal, from this decision was promptly taken to the State Supreme Court and a hearing was held in Philadelphia before the full bench on November 28, 1924. Further briefs were submitted by Deputy Attorney General Moyer and special deputy Robert J. Sterrett of Philadelphia. In their briefs, the State's attorneys again pointed out that the prohibitive clause in Section 18 of Article III is ambiguous because if it was intended to give it the meaning construed by the Dauphin County Court there was no necessity for the additional clause "to any person or community." The insertion of the latter was obviously for the purpose of prohibiting appropriations only to individuals, as is clearly brought out in the Debates of the Constitutional Convention. Furthermore, the briefs pointed out, that if the Dauphin County Court decision should be sustained this would jeopardize not only the Mothers' Assistance Act, but could also be construed as prohibiting every State retirement provision as an act of "benevolence." For, if the Constitution permits only gratituities for "military services," it is obvious that it precludes any other services. It would seem, therefore, that no interpretation could be made that under this limitation, retirement gratuities could be paid for State services whereby the state pays in full or in part pensions, at a time when no services are being rendered. Retirement provisions under these conditions would obviously be "benevolent" allowances. The argument that this is merely compensation for previous State services rendered, could hardly be upheld in view of this interpretation that no service can be compensated except "military service." If so, neither the judges', teachers', nor state employes' retirment systems can be proved valid.

Again, it was also argued that, if as the court declares, the legislature cannot do anything indirectly which the constitution prohibits it from doing directly, it would be difficult to sustain state appropriations to charitable institutions or hospitals. For when John Smith, a poor man, spends fourteen days in a hospital free of charge, and the State, under the present system of appropriations, recompenses the hospital, through the State Department of Welfare, for the number of free days service rendered at, let us say, $3.00 per day, is not this a direct appropriation of $42.00 benevolence to John Smith through the hospital?

Supreme Court Sustains Decision of Lower Court

On February 2, 1925, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania through an opinion rendered by Justice Kephart declared the Pennsylvania Old Age Assistance Act unconstitutional. The decision of the court is herewith given in full:

Opinion of the Court

The Old Age Assistance Act of 1923 was declared by the court below to be in violation of Section 18, Article III, of the Constitution. It was also held not to be a poor law, and the state treasurer, auditor general and the commission created by the act were enjoined from paying, or approving for payment, bills incurred thereunder. We are now asked to pass on the correctness of these conclusions.

The act in substance is intended for the relief of persons of old age whose financial circumstances in property or income are below a fixed sum. The statute mentions certain definite qualifications necessary to obtain the relief, but the amount of the assistance, if any, is to be determined by the commission, which the act creates. Among the qualifications are: minimum age of seventy years; citizenship and prior residence of fifteen years; and, where there is a residence of forty years, five years of it must immediately precede the application. A person otherwise within this class is disqualified if, at the time of the application, he or she is in prison, an insane asylum or a reform institution, or if such person has, for six months or more during the fifteen year period, deserted his wife or husband or children; a professional tramp within one year of the application is disqualified, or, if the person requesting aid has children or others financially able to support him, he may not receive assistance; also one is debarred from participating in the benefits of the act if his property exceeds $3,000, or, if married, the aggregate value of both husband and wife's property exceeds $3,000. Where assistance is given to one having property, on death it must be returned by the recipient's estate, with interest at three per cent. The maximum amount to be paid under the act is one dollar per day.

The provisions of the Constitution under which the act was declared void reads as follows: "No appreciations, except for pensions or gratuities for military services, shall be made for charitable, educational or benevolent purposes, to any persons or community, nor to any denominational or sectarian institution, corporation or association."

It is urged, in connection with our deliberation as to constitutionality, that the legislature, in thus selecting, from the entire membership of the state, such favored ones adjudged to be eligible to receive an old age pension of one dollar per day, unduly assumes parental obligations, and, in doing so, is guilty of excessive regulations of private affairs; the act is, therefore, socialistic.

If the act is not opposed to any constitutional barrier, this reason cannot appeal to us; whatever may be the ultimate result in such cases cannot influence the court. Aside from constitutional restrictions, the legislature is the sole judge of the wisdom, expedience and necessity for expending the state's money, and the amount to be expended, and the inauguration of the policy of government under which it is spent. (Commonwealth v. Pudor, 261 Pa. 129, 136). The judiciary "cannot run a race of opinions upon points of right, reason and expediency with the lawmaking power." (Commonwealth v. Moir, 199 Pa. 534, 542.)

No more, on the other hand, may we consider the reasons advanced by the proponents of the bill (if the bill is unconstitutional), who urge that it is a highly beneficial measure in that society, acting through the government, takes hold of a man who reaches a period of life when his usefulness as an active member of the social fabric is at a low ebb,—this latter situation, brought about through a depleted physical condition acquired in industrial and other pursuits, causing a partial loss of earning power. The legislature, they say, manifesting a desire to do good, indicating a love of mankind and an effort to promote happiness on the part of the State, steps in through the proposed law to relieve this distress; such efforts are not only a benefit to the men but to the government as well. From a sociological viewpoint, there may be much force in these suggestions; but if the act is stricken down by the fundamental law it is because these purposes are brought within the specific prohibition of section 18 of article 3.

Nor would the opposing thought, equally as important, be considered as a basis on which to form our judgment; that is, that the state is not obliged, either in justice or morals, to perform the duty outlined in the act. We may add, however, that as industrial evolution has worked a marked change in economic life, bringing about to a large extent the conditions complained of by the proponents of the act, the moral duty rests on these industrial organizations and other employers of labor to provide the system and means to take care of old age, and those dependent thereon. This as a primary rule of the present economic period. Some think the desired end may be accomplished by a law much the same as our workmen's compensation act, so moulded as to embrace the workmen's wife, with ultimate consideration through the poor laws for that relatively small percentage of individuals who may not be reached and who are in danger of becoming a charge on the body politic. It is a well known fact that the Workmen's Compensation Act, as drawn, omits consideration of a large class of citizens, for illustration the unfortunate farmer or his help, who happens to be injured. In support of the contentions against any state assistance it is urged, the great mass of the people, who have not been directly benefited by the services of the men taken care of by the proposed act, should not be called upon to make good the shortcomings of those who have been enriched through their labors, and that, as for service to the State, it rises no higher than that of every man, woman and child in the State obeying the law.

All these theories must be left untouched by judicial opinion; under our form of government, the legislature alone promulgates the policies of government, and is alone responsible if judgment is not well exercised, socially as well as financially. Our duty as judges is clearly defined; we cannot interfere with the acts of the legislative branch unless they legislate on subjects expressly forbidden by the Constitution. The reason is obvious. "One branch of the government cannot encroach on the domain of another without danger. The safety of our institutions depends in no small degree on a strict observance of this salutary rule." (Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 713.)

In passing on the constitutionally of the act such as the one before us, we do not for a moment question the high purpose that prompted those who are interested in the class of citizens therein provided for; nor do we wish to be understood as condemning such steps as wrongly directed; we are restricted to the question of the constitutional validity of the statute.

In determining whether an act of assembly is unconstitutional certain rules have been laid down for our guidance. It should not be so held unless it is clearly, strongly and imperatively prohibited. "If the act is within the scope of legislative power, it must stand, and we are bound to make it stand if it will upon any intendment. . . . . Nothing but a clear violation of the Constitution—a clear usurpation of power prohibited—will justify the judicial department in pronouncing an act of the legislative department unconstitutional and void." Every presumption should be indulged in its favor (P. R. R. Co. v. Riblet, 66 Pa. 164, 169), and one who claims an act is unconstitutional must prove his case beyond doubt. (Collins v. Lewis, 276 Pa. 435, 438; Sinking Fund Cases, supra; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623.)

Words must be understood in their general and popular sense, as the people who voted on the Constitution understood them, and we should not go beyond it unless the language is so ambiguous that we need to ascertain the mischief to be remedied. (Keller v. Scranton, 200 Pa. 130, 134; Collions v. State Treasurer, 271, Pa. 428, 434; Long v. Cheltenham Twp School District, 269 Pa. 472, 475; Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 P. 147, 159, 161.) What the State Constitution forbids is not authorized; what is not forbidden is authorized.

Considering section 18 of Article 3, does the Old Age Assistance Act involve an appropriation for charitable or benevolent purposes? The court below correctly held the words "charitable, educational and benevolent" were intended to include pension or gratuities of every kind, with the exception, because specifically mentioned, of those given for military service. Pensions or gratuities for military service are in the nature of compensation for a special and highly honored service to the state, implying the idea of a moral obligation on the part of the government; charity and benevolence are not founded on this consideration. They are sometimes used synonymously (Murphy Estate, 184 Pa. 310, 313), and are comprehensive enough to cover any form of gift made by persons or government kindly disposed towards their subjects or others without obligation to themselves, a desire to do good to advance man's well-being, a love toward mankind, with a wish to promote prosperity and happiness. (See Words and Phrases, First and Second Series.) Proponents of the statute admit these are the underlying purposes of the act, and that the legislature selected a class of persons to be so benefited as an obligation of society, regardless of their ability to earn a livelihood. No gift of money shall be made for benevolent purposes to any person, in substance says the Constitution, and surely these objects and purposes are within the prohibition.

The Commonwealth contends that a narrower view should be given "benevolence" when coupled with "to any person or community," and argue that the original purpose was (first) to prevent appropriations on account of border raids and other calamities happening within the limits of the Commonwealth, because of the drain on thetreasury; (2nd) to stop the notorious corruption practiced in securing the passage of these acts; (3rd) to prevent unfair discrimination in the dispensation of such benevolences and charities as between persons and communities; (4th) the legislature could not investigate the merits of these claims. There is no doubt the section effectually put an end to the illustrations submitted, but the language used has a much wider field of action, and there is not a line in the section to circumscribe its meaning. Its meaning will be found in many dictionaries and in the legal authorities collected in Words and Phrases. Courts must construe the language of the Constitution literally in the spirit in which it is understood, otherwise prejudice may crop out; and, while the debates of the convention may be interesting, they cannot be taken to override the ordinary meaning of the words employed.

Appellant further argues that the phrase "to any person or community" has a restricted meaning, and it is on these words the Commonwealth chiefly relies to sustain the act. In effect, appellant would have "person" used in an individual rather than a class sense, certainly not broad enough to include the government acting in an administrative capacity, functioning through an agency, to work out governmental policies. Appellant argues that direct appropriations, in terms, are not prohibited to such agency, therefore the act is valid, even though the ultimate object may be to give to persons prohibited from receiving the money thus appropriated. This contention is not sound; "person" and "community" do not comprehend a single person or place where persons are located; they are used in an inclusive sense, relating to an individual or a group or class of persons, wherever situated, in any part or all of the Commonwealth. It applies to persons, kind, class and place, without qualification. The language of the Constitution is an absolute and general prohibition. Nor does the fact the appropriation is made to an agency (the intermediate and logical step by which public money is distributed to citizens) aid appellant's case. The gift is not to the commission, but to the particular persons selected by the legislature to receive it. The commission cannot use the money; it merely passes it on to the selected class. It is none-the-less a gift directly to the individual, even though it pauses for a moment on its way thither in the hands of the agency. Nor can the act be sustained because the appropriation is to an agency as an arm of the government, working out a governmental policy. What the Constitution prohibits is the establishment of any such policy which causes an appropriation of state moneys for benevolent purposes to a particular class of its citizens, whether under the guise of an agency, as an arm of the government through which a system is created, or directly to the individual. As said by the court below, this proposition "is tantamount to saying the legislature can pass a law to do the thing indirectly which the Constitution imposes to restrain on the expenditure of money. But our present Chief Justice, in Collins v. State Treasurer, supra. 436, 439, 440, answered this when he said, "but that which cannot be done directly the law will not permit to be accomplished by indirection, for such a course, when tolerated by the courts, only serves to bring the law into contemp. .... The pruning knife of the law eliminates all such devices, and lays bare the realities of the situation, with which we must deal .....The state's money cannot be permitted to go through the agency of the hospital association ..... since it falls within the class to which that character of recognition is forbidden by the Constitution."

But, says the Commonwealth, if we give to the words "benevolent" and "to any person or community" the broad meaning as contended for by the appellee, and as given by the court below, we in effect wipe out appropriations to nonsectarian, non-denominational and other institutions or persons, drawing the parallel between the use of state money as provided in this act and that for the maintenance of privately owned hospitals, homes for aged citizens and orphans, the maintenance of large hospitals, treatment of mental and physical defectives, mothers' assistance act, state employees, school teachers' and judicial retirement acts. We might answer this directly by saying that if the instant act violates the constitution, our duty is plain regardless of the consequences to other appropriations. We can only speak generally of the supposedly parallel appropriations, and indicate in this opinion what appears to us to be the clear line of distinction. In Collins v. State Treasurer, supra, we held that there could be no appropriation direct or indirect, under this article of the Constitution, to denominational or sectarian institutions. But when the framers of the Constitution used this language, "No appropriations shall be made for charitable, educational or benevolent purposes . . . to any denominational or sectarian institution or corporation," an implied authority was given to appropriate to non-sectarian or non-denominational institutions for such purposes under the maximum "expressio unius est exclusio alterius." As there is no express porhibition against such appropriation, the legislature is free to expend as it sees fit; and this construction is not weakened by the use of the words "to any person or community."

Counsel also overlook the fact that there is no direct prohibition against the use of State money to pay for the care and maintenance of indigent, infirm and mentally defective persons, without ability or means to sustain themselves, and other charges of a like nature. They become direct charges on the body politic for its own preservation and protection. As such, in the light of an expense, they stand exactly in the same position as the preservation of law and order. To provide institutions or to compensate such institutions for the care and maintenance of this class of persons, has for a long period of time been recognized as a governmental duty, and where institutions are compensated (except as hereinafter noted) for the care of indigent, infirm and mentally defective, including certain physically defective persons, such appropriations may well be sustained on this theory. The expenditure of money for such purposes is and long has been recognized as a function of government, and the manner of its administration is restricted only by section 18 article 3, as stated by this court in Collins v. State Treasurer, supra. 433; the intent of these provisions was and therefore still is, to forbid the state from giving, either directly or indirectly, any recognition to a religious sect or denomination, even in the fields of public charity and education; they in effect provide that, to serve charitable. educational or benevolent purposes, the money of the people shall not be put under denominational control or into sectarian hands, for administration or distribution, no matter how worthy the end in view. Appropriations to liquidate these expenses cannot be made, directly or indirectly, through a department or agency, to denominational or sectarian institutions. (Collins v. State Treasurer, supra.) But, as said before, we do not attempt to pass judgment on any specific appropriation, and are speaking generally with regard to the acts held up as parallel.

Relative to the retirement acts to which appellant calls attention, the basis on which these acts are founded is neither charitable nor benevolent; they are founded on faithful, valuable services actually rendered to the Commonwealth over a long period of years, under a system of classification which the legislature has considered reasonable. These appropriations are for delayed compensation for those years of continued service actually given in the performance of public duties in their respective capacities, with the quality of right and obligation in its concept. It is compensation for the hazard of long continued public employment. Furthermore, in the Judicial Retirement Act, those participating in or partaking of its benefits are required to hold themselves in readiness to perform such work as may be assigned to them, and to act in the several capacities stated in the statute when designated so to do by the court to which they were formerly attached. It is a well known fact that persons receiving the benefits of this act, all of whom were or are of mature age, have not only held themselves open to perform the duties that may be assigned to them, but, since their retirement, have actually performed services to the Commonwealth of the utmost importance, and have continued to do so until within a very few days of their death, and those who still live are now performing those services; they in effect hold a legislatively created office for which they are being compensated.

It is earnestly contended that the Old Age Assistance Act should be sustained as a poor law in that State thereunder assumes administrative control substituting in part for outdoor relief, the method adopted by the act, adding thereto a new and comprehensive definition of aged poor, and inaugurating a uniform system of poor laws in the Commonwealth, in addition to the laws now in force. The poor laws of Pennsylvania were taken from the Elizabethan law of 1601, and our act of March 9, 1771 (1Sm. 338), continued in effect until June 13, 1836. P. L. 541. No material change has been made in these laws except, as contended for by appellant, by the act now under consideration. It is urged that the state may define and classify poor persons; if this be true, it is only so to a limited extent; in either attempt it cannot encroach on the manifest prohibition expressed in the Constitution by section 18 of article 3, now under consideration.

As mentioned in another part of this opinion, there are diverse classes of individuals who become charges on society as a seemingly necessary incident of our form of government, and among these are aged, infirm, lame, blind, or sick who are unable to support themselves or who have no means of support, and there are no other persons required by law to support them. Pennsylvania early recognized her obligation to all citizens in this respect, and has faithfully kept it. The question here is not whether the State can take over the care of its poor, and relieve the counties and poor districts through the agency created by the Act of 1923; this act nowhere embraces the subject of prior poor laws; it was not intended to, and, if it did, is wholly ineffective for that purpose.

Poor persons and paupers have been used as synomymous words, although not necessarily meaning the same, but the thing which for more than two hundred years fixed the charge on the Commonwealth was the fact of inability to support themselves, and without means of support. The Constitution of 1873 recognized this condition as a public liability. Nothing is said therein prohibiting, interfering with or controlling the performance of the duty. But that liability or charge cannot be extended, or a new condition created to be brought within, which would be in direct conflict with section 18 of article 3. When the Constitution was adopted the terms "poor laws" and "poor persons" were well understood. These speak of "poor persons not able to work", or "by reason of age, disease, infirmity or other disability, are unable to work," "the needy, sick or indigent," "without means of support," to which the poor authorities were required to give aid. Except as noted, section 18 of article 3 did not cover them.

A large majority of our citizens are poor people when the word is compared with the term "rich". We speak of certain working people as poor people, without attributing to them the idea they are not able to work and support themselves. If we were to say to these same people "you are objects of public charity and benevolence," they would not only feel insulted but would be inclined to physically resent the imputation. The term "poor", as used by law-makers, described those who are destitute and helpless, unable to support themselves, and without means of support. These are objects of public charity, and in every civilized nation the relief of the poor is a public obligation, justifying taxation to raise funds to liquidate it.

Under the Act of 1923 the fundamental basis of poor laws (indigency or inability to work and without means of support) is swept aside as to certain persons, and for it is substituted an age limit for persons having property less then $3,000 and an income less than $365.00 a year, residence within the Commonwealth for certain length of time, discretion in the commission for the imperative mandate to poor directors, and other manifest substitutions.

With knowledge of what our "poor laws and persons" from time immemorial have meant, it will be readily seen the subjects considered under the Old Age Pension Act of 1923 are not within that class, and, though the legislature may define such persons, it cannot invade the prohibition set forth in section 18 of article 3 of the Constitution, thereby enlarging a class well known to those who adopted the Constitution and who knew of the government's responsibility for their keeping; certainly not by including citizens able to help themselves, who have an estate up to $3,000 and an income of $365.00 a year. It does not require much imagination to show the contrast between the persons considered by the Act of 1923 and those under the poor laws.

If the legislature may call persons with an income of $365 per year and property of $3,000 paupers, there is no reason why subsequent legislatures could not so define persons with double, treble or quadruple those figures. In other words, in appropriating money, the minute the historical definition of poor persons is broken through, the act enters the field of forbidden legislation through section 18 of article 3, and falls as a poor law.

As said by Mr. Justice Brewer in Griffith v. Osakee Twp., 14 Kans. 418, 422, 27 Pac. 322, 324, "Cold and harsh as the statement may seem, it is nevertheless true that the obligation of the state to help is limited to those who are unable to help themselves." We agree with what the court below says on this question: "That system provided for poor districts, poor directors and overseers, and for the relief of paupers is a matter of local concern. Those who framed the Constitution understood it, and no word is contained in the Constitution with reference to it. The system was left untouched. If there had been any purpose to change that system, some word indicating that purpose would have been found in the Constitution.....The conclusion is therefore irresistible that a direct appropriation from the State Treasury to any person or class of persons, cannot be sustained on the theory that it is a discharge of the inherent obligation of the State to take care of its paupers."

Decree affirmed.

Commission to Complete the Printing of the Report of the Old Age Assistance Commission

The Supreme Court dicision forced the Old Age Assistance Commission to suspend its work promptly. In order to complete the studies of the Commission and to print its report, Joint Resolution Number 105 was enacted by the 1925 General Assembly as follows:

Whereas, the Old Age Assistance Act created by the 1923 Legislature providing for the creation of an Old Age Assistance Commission has been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, and

Whereas, the Commission appointed under the above act has collected and prepared for presentation to this Assembly a great deal of invaluable data bearing upon the entire problem of old age dependency in the State which the Legislature for three consecutive sessions sought to obtain; and

Whereas, the Supreme Court decision invalidating the law now prevents the commission from completing this valuable report now in the hands of the State printer, collating its data so that it could be available to the public and also prevents the payment of certain office expenditures incurred in good faith previous to the rendering of the decision; and

Whereas, of the appropriation of twenty-five thousand dollars ($25,000) made to the Commission of 1923, more than half is still in the State Treasury,

Section 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same that the Governor appoint a Commission of three to wind up the affairs of the Old Age Assistance Commission, to complete the printing of the report of its findings and to so arrange its data as to make it available for public distribution.

Section 2. An apppropriation of two thousand dollars ($2000) or so much thereof as may be necessary is hereby specifically made to the Commission thus appointed by the Governor for the purpose of paying for the printing and clerical and other expenses necessary to do the work provided for in Section one of this Act.

Governor Gifford Pinchot approved the resolution and reappointed the members of the Old Age Assistance Commission to the latter body. As a result of this resolution the Report of the Old Age Assistance Commission, to which references have already been made, was presented to the 1925 Legislature.

Proposed Amendment to the Constitution

To overcome the constitutional limitations and to permit future legislatures to make appropriations for purposes such as were contemplated by the nullified act, the General Assembly of 1925 adopted joint resolution No. 6-A which reads as follows:

Section 1. Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met, that the following amendment to the Constitution of Pennsylvania is hereby proposed in accordance with the eighteenth article thereof:

That article three be amended by adding thereto the following:

Section 25. The General Assembly may by general law make appropriations of money for assistance to aged indigent residents of the Commonwealth.

The resolution, after adoption by the 1927 Legislature, will be submitted to a direct vote of the people in 1928. If the majority of the citizens of the State decide in favor of this amendment, the State Legislature will then be permitted to make appropriations in behalf of the indigent aged.

Commission to Further Study the Subject of Old Age Pensions, 1925-1927

In addition to the passage of the proposed amendment to the constitution, the General Assembly of 1925 also passed act No. 374 which provides:

That the Governor is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a commission to consist of five reputable citizens of Pennsylvania, who shall serve without compensation other than for their reasonable expenses, to make further study of the subject of old age pensions with special reference as to the advisability and practicability of a contributory system as against the straight pension idea, and to secure all the available facts as to the actual working out of these plans in this country and abroad, in order to give to the people of this Commonwealth the most complete information possible regarding the subject.

Re-Appointment of Commission

Governor Gifford Pinchot approved the above resolution on May 13, 1925, and promptly re-appointed Mrs. Mary V. Grice, Philadelphia, David S. Ludlum, Devon, and James H. Maurer, Reading, all of whom served on all the previous Commissions, to the new Commission. Mr. John F. O'Toole of Pittsburgh was appointed as fourth member of the Commission while the fifth place is still vacant. At its first organization meeting the Commission re-elected Mr. Maurer as Chairman and re-appointed Mr. Abraham Epstein as Research Director.

Studies of the 1925-1927 Commission

In part compliance with the Legislative request for "all available facts as to the actual working out of these (pensions) plans in this country and abroad," the Commission has published separately an exhaustive study made by its research director of industrial pension plans now in practice in the United States.[1] Of the estimated total of about 400 industrial pension plans in the United States, 370 of these have been examined by the Commission and summaries of these are presented in the report. Some of the main conclusions of the Commission on this subject are stated as follows in that report:

[1] The Problem of Old Age Pensions in Industry by Abraham Epstein, Old Age Pension Commission, Harrisburg, 1926.

Approximately 88 per cent of all the formal private industrial pension plans now in force were established during the past fifteen years or since 1910.

The total number of persons now in receipt of pensions from all industrial concerns in the United States does not exceed 90,000. There are probably 1,800,000 dependent aged persons 65 years of age and over in the country today. From 5 to 6 per cent, therefore, of all needy aged are being provided for through the medium of pensions from firms that have employed them.

The amount of the average industrial pension is estimated to be $485 per year.

The estimated total amount spent during the last fiscal year by all concerns in this country paying pensions of all kinds to approximately 90,000 individuals, is about $43,000,000.

About 16 per cent of all employees engaged in the manufacturing and mechanical industries, transportation, extraction of minerals and clerical occupations have the expectations of being paid old age pensions by the concerns for which they have worked.

Private pension systems are for the most part confined to the industries in the public service—i. e. railways, urban transit, power and light companies, etc. Two-thirds of all wage-earners covered by formal pension plans are included in the public service industries. If the employees in the metal industries who are covered by pension plans are added to the number of workers so provided for in the public utilities group, the total number of persons in these two categories who are now covered by pension systems would represent roughly four-fifths of all the workers protected by private pension plans.

As a rule only the largest and more prosperous corporations can now afford the cost of systematically pensioning aged employees.

Seventy-two per cent of all the concerns who notified this Commission that they are operating pension plans employ over 1,000 workers each. What this fact really signifies when seeking to determine the extent to which industrial pension plans protect all workers, will only be realized when it is understood that the bulk of wage-earners in this country are still employed by comparatively small concerns. Only 6 per cent of all industrial establishments in the United States employ 101 workers and over, it is shown in the United States Census figures for 1920.

Practically all pension plans which have come under the scrutiny of this Commission include in their rules a number of conditions which materially limit the ability of the average employee to qualify for pensions and which also makes it possible to use the existence of the pension system as a means of enforcing plant discipline in some cases. In most of the plans studied, the minimum length of service demanded before the worker becomes eligible for a pension is from 20 to 25 years. In view of the fact that there are authoritative statistics which show that only less than 4 per cent of the male workers in industry remain with the same employer for twenty years or over, and only less than 3 per cent of the women workers stay that long in the one job, it is difficult to see how the total number of workers who can qualify for industrial pensions under rules of this sort can grow to such proportions as will serve to materially reduce the great army of indigent aged in this country.

Although what is sometimes described as "Big Business," may be said to have been "sold" on the fundamental proposition that it pays to pension off old employees, there is no general agreement that the methods now in operation for securing greater efficiency through the establishment of pension systems are altogether effective and well planned. The fact is that the heads of big industrial undertakings who were the first to adopt pension systems are now among the most outspoken critics of current pension methods. The benefits to the individual concern which had been anticipated from these plans when they were first adopted, have not been realized in practice. On the other hand, labor unionist assert that most pension plans are designed with a view to win workers away from the unions and as a weapon in case of strikes.

One of the most important disclosures of this study is the lack of proper financial provisions to meet the pension payments. With rare exceptions, the concerns having pension plans have not set aside special funds to take care of the pensions as they fall due, but expect to meet these liabilities simply out of operating expenses. Almost none of the companies which established pension systems made scientific calculations in advance of the probable cost to themselves over a period of years of these pension systems. And in the case of the companies which are establishing new pension systems this habit of largely trusting to luck that future pension costs will be within their capacity to pay, is being still adhered to.

Actuaries contend that it is difficult to make a mathematically reliable estimate of the probable liabilities which an industrial establishment undertakes when establishing a pension system without constant revision and checking. Insurance companies and independent authorities criticize the whole principle of allowing private firms which are not subject to public regulations in this respect to engage in what amounts to the business of writing annuities.

This Commission has come to the conclusion that as pension obligations are now carried, unless our present business prosperity continues without periods of reaction, it is likely in the long run that public or charitable agencies will be forced to assume the maintenance of many thousands of workers whose employers had led them to expect that they would be granted pensions in their old age.

The ever increasing per capita output in industry and the changing conditions of life generally in most industrial communities are markedly shortening the average "working-life" of the great mass of men and women engaged in industry. The average amount of the savings accumulated by the wage-earner who has been retired from his job, is not sufficient to maintain him in old age. The Commission is convinced that the need for old age assistance has been growing from year to year and that a practical solution for meeting this want becomes more pressing as time goes on.

After studying at length and in great detail the highly meritorious efforts which are being made to care of some five or six per cent of all the needy aged in this country by private employers, the Commission finds that it is more than ever justified by the facts of the case in concluding that through legislation alone can the needs of all the indigent aged who have contributed their share towards the welfare of this Nation and Commonwealth be met adequately.

In compliance with the legislative request "to make further study of the subject of Old Age Pensions," the report herewith is submitted.

What the Industrial and Business Leaders of Pennsylvania Prefer in Old Age Pension Legislation

In seeking a solution to the problem of old age dependency, no group is so vitally concerned as the leaders of the large industries and businesses who are constantly brought face to face with the difficulties of their own aged workers. To comply with the legislative request for a report on "the advisability and practicability of a contributory system as against the straight pension idea" without consulting these important leaders, the Commission felt would be neglecting one of the most valuable sources of information and helpfulness. The suggestions of this group—some of whom had had actual experience in attempts to solve their own difficult problems,—regarding the best method to be followed in working out a constructive program of relief for the aged of this Commonwealth, the Commission believed to prove invaluable in its studies. Because of this conviction a questionnaire was sent during 1926 by the Commission to the presidents, or acting executive officers, of the largest industrial and commercial organizations in this Commonwealth. The list of those addressed was made up from a standard commercial directory and from a list of business men supplied the Commission by the State Chamber of Commerce. Every type of corporate undertaking either in manufacturing, transportation, mining or trade was included. The group of firms, or individual proprietors, to whom the questionnaire was sent was representative of almost every one of the principal business interests of Pennsylvania. The questionnaire was introduced with a short statement of facts and the Pennsylvania employers of labor were asked the following questions:

Questions Asked

1. Over thirty countries abroad, including practically all industrial nations of the world, have solved their old age dependency problem by providing systems of insurance or pensions to the aged men and women, who, in qualifying for this, must have attained a certain age, and have complied with certain citizenship and other regulations. Do you believe that our solution of this problem lies also in similar state action, as has been the case with Workmen's Compensation and Mothers' Pensions?

2. If not, will you please state your suggestions as to how else the problem could be met.

3. If the state is to take action, are you in favor of a non-contributory pension plan such as has been in force until recently in Great Britain and is in operation in practically all other English-speaking countries as well as in several states in our own country i. e. a plan where all funds come from the various means of taxation and pensions are granted to those coming under certain definite classifications? Our studies in this State have shown that for the money spent now on every dependent aged in our almshouses three persons could be supported on a pension with a maximum of $1.00 per day in their own homes.

4. Do you prefer a contributory system wherein contributions are made by the state, employers and employees, or by the latter two groups only which go to a special fund for that purpose? These plans generally prevail in about twenty countries abroad and a similar one has recently been adopted in Great Britain. In the latter country the insurance now provides for old age, widows' and orphans' pensions and the contributions are approximately fifteen cents a week per man and a little less than eight cents per woman, divided equally between the employer and employee. The government now makes a flat contribution to this fund but as the accrued liabilities are reduced it is hoped to have the fund self-sustaining.

5. If you are opposed to a compulsory plan of the above character would you favor a similar plan on a voluntary basis?

6. Would you prefer a system modeled along the lines of the present State Workmen's Compensation Law?

7. Any other suggestions that you may have will be appreciated and given careful consideration by our Commission.

Pennsylvania Industrial Leaders Recognize Needs of the Aged

One hundred and fifty-four direct replies to the above questionnaire were received. The large majority of these replies emphatically recognized the needs of a system of pensions for aged indigent persons to be supervised by the Commonwealth and paid for in part or in full by public grants. Twenty-eight of the replies could not be considered in a numerical analysis of the opinions presented on the issues raised by the Commission as the writers either said they were unable to discuss the subject or their answers had no direct bearing on the questions asked. A number of these business men refused to express their own views on the subject, or said they had no favorite plan and referred the Commission to the official platform of their trade or business associations.

83 Out of 126 Industrialists Favor Some System of State Pensions

One-hundred and twenty-six responses to the questionnaire contained definite expression of opinion as to how it would be best to meet the problem of the indigent aged. At least 83 of the 126 classifiable opinions are clearly in favor of some system of old age pensions paid for in part or in full out of funds of the Commonwealth; 59 business men, in this group of 83, definitely state without qualification that the need for a pension system is pressing and that State or Federal action along the lines of a contributory or non-contributory scheme is the only just and workable method of solving the problem. Twenty-one business leaders in this group favor straight government pensions, to be paid from the State Treasury while 38 prefer the inauguration of some definite system of contributory insurance. The remainder of the group of 83, or about 24 urge pension schemes having certain modified features. These 24 opinions fall into the following three groups:

(a) Ten of the correspondents of the Commission on this matter go on record as being in favor of a compulsory system of insurance against indigence in old age through the medium of some legislation based on the principles of the present Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Act which they all praise highly as the result of practical experience with its workings.

(b) Seven heads of corporations express the view that though they do not entirely believe in the principles of a state pension system, they are convinced that as a matter of actual fact the public demand for such a measure renders it inevitable both in this State and throughout the country.

(c) The correspondents for seven of the firms queried replied in substance that they are fully satisfied, from personal experience and what general information they had received, that old age dependency was a problem which required immediate public attention but they take the position that a State Commission is the best judge of what is the most advisable plan to remedy the condition. This group of business men say in effect that they are prepared to endorse whatever plan is devised by the Commission.

Seventeen Favor Private Industrial Pensions

Seventeen employers of labor take the position that it is the moral duty of industry or commerce to take care of its servants when they become too old to work. This group is in favor of pension systems but believe these should be adopted by employers of labor who should meet the entire cost. Most of the industrialists holding these views concede the need of impartial expert assistance from some public agency, in the establishment of such plans. They all recognize that if these systems are to be effective, the plans must be safeguarded against all contingencies, must be sound financially and supervised somewhat along the lines that banking and insurance institutions are subject to regulations designed to safeguard the interests of the community as a whole.

Twenty-six are Opposed to any State Action

Only twenty-six of the 126 classified replies in response to the Commission's questionnaire flatly oppose old age pension systems and express themselves against state action to assist aged persons. Some of these industrialists express a preference for Federal rather than state action in the establishment of a pension system. Their contention is that as long as Pennsylvania stands alone in carrying such a system, manufacturing in this State might suffer a competitive disadvantage.

Outstanding Views as Disclosed by Questionnaire

While the number of answers received by the Commission from the industrial and business interests of the State is regretfully small, none-the-less, the replies received—including as they do opinions of some of our foremost employers of labor—reveal, we believe, a fair and characteristic example of the attitude of Pennsylvania employers regarding this problem. The entire correspondence discloses some extremely interesting results. Of supreme significance is the preponderance of opinion in favor of a State program of old age assistance on the part of large Pennsylvania employers of labor. The general sentiment in favor of the contributory principle in pension legislation, which was brought to light in analyzing the replies to the questionnaire, is one of the most interesting revelations of this canvass. There is roughly a two to one majority in favor of a contributory system among those in favor of a state program to relieve the dependent aged.

Business Men Glad Problem is Being Studied by Commission

Most of the industrialists and business men who replied to the Commission, in addition to filling out the questionnaire, wrote letters expressing gratification that the whole subject of old age pensions is being studied in this State by an impartial official agency; as the problem of providing for aged employees in their own establishments is rapidly becoming more and more difficult and pressing and that assistance to these persons must be granted either from public funds or by the employers themselves. Corporation heads having pension systems in operation in their own establishments, in many cases state frankly that they are not satisfied with the manner in which these have been working and are doubtful of the eventual success of privately managed pension methods in general. Most of these business men say that they have been deeply impressed with the difficulties in arriving at an actuarially sound basis for a pension system in many private industrial undertakings. All of the executives who discuss the question, either pro or con, make it clear that the findings of the Commission cannot fail to be of great value to them.

The correspondence of the Commission shows that the representatives of so-called "big business" are on the whole quite broadminded, objective in their treatment of the topic and often well informed on the question of old age pension legislation. The majority of men of this standing are disposed to discuss the whole problem in an impartial manner, recognize the necessity for having scientific data on the subject, and are, on the whole, favorably inclined towards any practical plan for private or public action designed to assist those aged persons who can no longer be employed profitably by modern business or industrial establishments. As a general conclusion it may be said that those business men who have studied the problem of dependency in old age most extensively, are the persons who are the most earnest advocates of State action.

In the following pages, what may be described as a symposium is presented, giving a summary of varied opinions on old age pensions as expressed by the business men and industrial leaders of Pennsylvania. It was found impossible to publish all the letters received, but an effort has been made to select for publication those letters which give the most truthful and telling picture of the views of different schools of thought among the industrialists of Pennsylvania on this particular problem. A number of the letters printed here may not seem especially significant in themselves but are included as being typical of a group of other such letters expressing similar views. As far as possible the communications included in this section have been chosen with a view of giving every type of industrial undertaking some representation and to have opinions printed from business men located in all sections of the State. The outstanding views of individual employers on the various state pension programs are grouped under headings of their preferences and are presented in detail in the following pages:

I Employers Expressing a Preference for a System of "Straight" Pensions

The term "straight pensions" is a convenient description for a pension which is paid directly out of public funds and to the cost of which the pensioner has made no direct contribution other than that levied on all taxpayers.

As already stated, nineteen of the corporation heads who respondent to the questionnaire favor "straight" pensions as against any other system of providing for the indigent aged. As it happens, very few of the advocates of "straight" pensions did more than answer "yes" and "no" to the various propositions submitted to them by the Commission. Some who are quoted in the following section as arguing for "straight" pensions do so in rather a negative manner. This particular group of correspondents seems to favor a non-contributory pension plan largely because of the difficulties in the way of putting a contributory pension system into operation. A number of employers, for instance, who can provide only intermittent work for their employees, are of the opinion that a blanket system of contributory pension payments would be impossible to put into effect in any satisfactory manner. Other business heads point out that the casual employee, the housewife, the domestic servant and workers in purely seasonal work, etc., the very classes who are most likely to become public charges under present conditions, are also the groups from whom contributions might be most difficult to collect.

The Commission cannot, of course, do more than present in the clearest way possible the replies submitted to it. Arguments for "straight" pensions have been received by this Commission in great numbers from business men of all types in the past and it must be borne in mind that the meager representation of this school of thought in the present symposium is probably accidental to some extent and again may be due to the seeming emphasis placed upon the contributory pension plan in the questionnaire itself. Among the outstanding opinions favoring "straight" old age pensions are the following:

Printing Machinery Corporation Favors Pension Law

A notably comprehensive and careful reply to the questionnaire, favoring a state pension law, was received from H. D. Best, President of the Lanston Monotype Machine Company of Philadelphia. The letter was drawn up by C. E. Moldrup, Factory Manager of the Corporation at the request of the President and sent to the Commission as expressing the views of the Directors of the concern as a whole.

The Communication is as follows:

There is no doubt but what the question of lack of income at time of old age, whether due to infirmity or lay-off, caused by lack of work or falling off in efficiency has always been a fear as regards the future on the part of the major part of the working classes or masses. Whenever a question of reduction in working force must be faced by an industrial organization it is always a very trying task to the individual who at such time must assume the responsibility of deciding whom to keep and whom to drop. In case of the aged worker the problem is a very serious one, for such a person has only a limited chance for new employment.

In recent years we see, more and more, an age limit for admittance within the very large industrial establishments, some being more liberal than others, although the dividing line seems to be between forty to forty-five years. The same condition is found in the various railroad systems.

Whereas the reason for the limit is chiefly the capacity for work, yet the reason has been stated, and justly stated, by many employers that they do not wish to assume the responsibility for caring for the old age of people whose youth and socalled best years have been spent in the employ of other industrial establishments. This however, does not properly dispose of the man who, through no fault of his own, loses his income and ability to provide for his family. This problem affects not only the old age but also periods of industrial depression.

Old age support may be assured in any of the following ways:

(a) Setting aside a certain portion of earnings on the part of the worker himself for use against old age. This sounds very beautiful, but is not practical partly, due to lack of willingness on the part of the worker himself and also due to the small yearly sum and the many years which are involved in obtaining a sufficiently large fund.

(b) Pension by the employer through compulsory retirement when a certain age is reached. This system is in use by a large number of railroads and very large industrial establishments. Unfortunately, the system can be greatly abused and, furthermore, its universal adoption is prohibited by the fact that the earnings of many companies would not permit of such an arrangement.

State Action Only Rational Program

(c) Old age pension on the part of the state...This system has been in use for years in several of the countries of Europe and seems the only rational way of meeting our own problem.

If federal employees after a certain number of years are entitled to pension and this expense is borne by the people in general through taxation, then it is just right and equitable that the rank and file of the workers be assured a similar protection, as they and their work have made possible the earnings of their employers and in turn enabled these to render the Government its share of their profits.

How Money Is To Be Raised

If a State pension covering old age is to be granted, the expense of same should be borne by all. We believe that a tax levied on every worker in proportion to his or her earnings beyond a fixed minimum amount and graded according to his or her status as either married or single would accomplish the desired aim. This should be a state tax which should be used solely for its purpose, namely, "old age pension." The right to claim such pension to be open to every citizen upon reaching the age necessary and after having qualified as regards prescribed conditions covered by a new law. This right would very likely only be exercised by people who felt the need or necessity for such assistance, which in no way would be classed as "poorhouse relief," but as something which all people paid for as a mass and to which they, therefore, would render a claim when need arose.

The Philadelphia Record Company States Case Concisely

Mr. Melville E. Ferguson, Executive Editor of the Philadelphia Record, writing in behalf of the Record Corporation makes a most forceful and concise statement in favor of a straight State old age pension system as against a contributory system. Mr. Ferguson says:

Responsibility for the welfare of the indigent aged now rests with the State.

The state is relieved of a part of this burden by private charity; but the responsibility remains and is met by institutions maintained by the taxpayers. I can see no reason for shifting the weight of the load merely because experience has demonstrated the advisibility of employing a better method of carrying it. The cost of an old age pension system should be met wholly by the State out of funds raised by general taxation. The employers will bear their share of this. In my judgment it would be as unwise and unjust to saddle them disproportionately with the burden of caring for employees whose usefulness has been terminated by advanced age as it would be to charge them with the support of prospective employees who are not yet old enough to be useful, i. e. children.

Cites Personal Experience As An Argument For Straight Pensions

Mr. M. G. Gibson, Treasurer of Thomas M. Royal and Company, which has its head office in Philadelphia, writes from actual experience in stating his objections to a compulsory contributory pension system. This correspondent writes:

I believe that state or Federal action to secure old age pensions is desirable—pensions becoming payable at a certain age under certain citizenship qualifications.

I do not favor a contributory fund. I know, from personal experience in England, the clerical work necessary in administering such a fund and the burdens thrown on employers and employees. While there is no doubt that a personal contribution has a good moral influence, I believe that here, where labor is more mobile and where conditions change much more rapidly than in Europe, the expense and inconvenience of a contributory system would be greater than any advantage to be derived. Census and life insurance statistics are available to enable the State to fix an appropriate annual contribution, so that there needed be no heavy fluctuation in the sum required to be found by the Commonwealth from year to year.

In connection with the administration of such a fund, it should be noted that in England, pensions are payable at local post offices. This provides a convenient and cheap method of payment, which can hardly be paralleled in this State, but it may be possible to obtain cooperation from the Federal Post Office.

Department Store Head Favors Federal Action

Mr. Ellis Mills, head of the Ellis Mills Department Store, Reading, urges a straight non-contributory pension system. Mr. Mills believes that Federal legislation should be enacted to provide for old age pensions, but does not oppose state action if a measure can be worked out which would apply to all states uniformly.

Offers Alternative Plan Also

Some employers who favor a non-contributory pension plan make certain recommendations as to the sort of substitute system they would advise in case a straight pension law is not enacted. Mr. John M. Taylor, General Manager of the Diamond State Fibre Company, Bridgeport, writes as follows:

In my opinion there should be established a non-contributory pension plan which, of course, the tax payers as a whole would pay for.

As a second choice no doubt a plan could be worked out modeled along the lines of or in conjunction with the present Workmen's Compensation Law.

Believes In A "Straight" Pension System But Not in Pioneering

Mr. Edgar W. Tait, President of the Allegheny River Mining Company of Pittsburgh is in favor of a non-contributory pension plan subject to these qualifications:

Provided the restrictions are so rigid that undeserving persons will not be granted pensions, and that the system is absolutely assured, in the beginning of freedom from political abuse and mis-use.

President Tait goes on to carefully explain why he is in favor of a non-contributory pension plan:

If any system is adopted it should be that of financing the plan solely from general state taxes. My reasons for this view are:

(a) The turnover in labor is so great that there is llittle personal moral feeling of responsibility on the part of any employer.

(b) The migration of labor from one state to another is so general, that a plan of employee contribution would be very difficult to administer.

(c) The moral, sympathetic responsibility of caring for the unfortunate aged, should fall upon the population at large. Improvidence or misfortune or inmate individual inefficiency is not the fault of the employer. The employer, in fact, is doing more than anyone else to afford an earning power to workers. The population at large, including those who receive their incomes from general investments, speculations, and trade, should be as sympathetic as the employers who are paying out money to the workers. "Poor houses," almshouses, charity hospitals have long been considered the concern of the general public. I consider the proposed innovation in the same category.

In concluding his replies to the questionnaire Mr. Tait writes.

I, personally, opposed the Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Law until I was satisfied that enough other States had, or would pass similar legislation. I then, in opposition to others in our own industry, favored the Compensation Law with certain important practical modifications. I state this to indicate that I am conscious of the needs of the workingman, and of the needs of Pennsylvania's prosperity, —which, after all, are bed-fellows. As to Old Age Pensions, I reserve my opinion as to the advisibility of the plan, but I am most positively averse to our State being the pioneer in the movement.....I believe that uncoordinated action by the individual states is inadvisable.

Says Smaller Concerns Cannot Afford Reliable Pension Systems

The conviction that the smaller corporation is not financially competent in the very nature of present day business to undertake a pension system, no matter how willing it may be to do so, is growing rapidly and is frequently expressed in the correspondence from business men received by the Commission. A typical example of this point of view is contained in a letter from Mr. Paul Belin, President of the Scranton Lace Company, of Scranton, who says:

I am convinced that the only feasible way to handle pensions for dependent men and women who have reached a certain age is by a state pension fund. The more I have studied the matter, the more convinced I am that a small corporation like ours is not strong enough financially to guarantee that pensions would be permanent, and unless so guaranteed they are not of much value.

Problem of Casual Employment As Related To Pension Legislation

N. S. Reader, Vice President of the Pressed Steel Car Company of Pittsburgh, writes from the New York offices of the corporation. Mr. Reader states:

It so happens that in this Company the employment we have to offer is more or less intermittent and a contributory pension system when considered in connection with the fact that the greater number of employees of our Company are only with us at intermittent times, due to changes in the volume of work, changes due to more desirable employment being found elsewhere, etc., would result in either refunding the employee his contribution when leaving the services of our Company or in a tremendous amount of work in following through the contribution made by the employee while in the service of possibly a large number of employers, and would not in our opinion work out satisfactorily in general application.

A pension system by states and provided by taxation would mean a man might live the greater portion of his life in one state and arrive at pension age or condition shortly after moving to another, which would seem to have practically the same objection referred to in connection with the individual corporation. It would, therefore, seem to us that a general pension system could only be workable if national in its application.

Mr. Reader goes on to point out that pension systems established by individual employers cannot take care of the problem of casual workers, those employed by individuals with no financial responsibility, and those working for themselves. For these reasons, Mr. Reader believes that a national pension law should be adopted rather than a state law.

Similar views are expressed by Henry P. Hoffstot, president of the Koppel Industrial Car and Equipment Company.

Proposes Special Tax For Pension Fund

Mr. W. S. Brumbaugh, president of the Monessen Foundry and Machine Company of Monessen, submits a plan which evidently amounts to a general state-wide non-contributory pension plan. Mr. Brumbaugh writes:

I would be interested in some sort of a tax of so many mills on each citizen of Pennsylvania to create a fund for the aged, both men and women. There are a great many items that could have a small tax added to same in each county of the State.

Let this tax be collected the same time the usual yearly county taxes are paid. I cannot see why anybody would object to an additional small tax on gas and motor oils to establish this fund

"Straight" Pension The Only Safe Plan For All Workers

Mr. J. B. Shea, president of the Joseph Horne Company, Pittsburgh, can see no safe way by which all wage-earners can be protected against dependence in old age except through a "straight" pension system paid for out of public funds. Mr. Shea would prefer a compulsory contributory pension plan but believes that there is no way of making it cover all employees, those of both sexes, women employed in domestic service, and workers in seasonal or intermittent occupations. Mr. Shea sees a danger of the establishment of a bureaucracy in a State old age pensions system but sees "no equally safe way" of protecting all those he believes should be protected. Mr. Shea goes on to say:

Recognizing the human appeal of some pension plan and the injustices of the present "no system" and favoring some compulsory contributory plan as necessary to the creation of a personal interest in all, I am unable to convince myself that it can be put into effect in a way that will take care of any but those workers who are employed by large and strong organizations. I see no way of applying it to the many thousands of small employers or to household service. The very great "mortality" in all newly started businesses and manufacturers makes almost impossible the proper collection of employers and employees contributions by the state and that probably means that unless the system is to be allowed to break down when needed that the state must underwrite the whole sum.

Suggests The Blind Also Be Included

Many interesting suggestions are made by the correspondents of the Commission in replying to the questionnaire. Mr. E. C. Eberly, president and treasurer of Oakbrook Hosiery Mills of Reading, urges that the blind be brought within the provision of an old age pension law:

I wish to state that I am thoroughly in favor of pensioning the old age dependent, but I am also thoroughly convinced the blind should be included in the same class.....

The writer then goes on to state his views on how the money for pensions should be raised:

Every person over 21 years of age should pay a maximum tax, whether it be fifty cents or a dollar in order to get a certain amount. The greater amount, however, should be placed on persons according to his financial rating or standing. In other words just the same as the school tax is made up at the present time of a maximum amount and a mill rate per thousand, so that the man who is more fortunate pays more to this cause, and at the same time have it so that everybody is in on this proposition.

Urges Pensions And Proper Institutions For The Aged

Mr. E. Rieck, president of the Rieck-McJunkin Diary Company of Pittsburgh, is in favor of a state pension system. He believes that institutional care for the aged could not be eliminated entirely by the provision of regular payments by the State. Many aged persons require special care, Mr. Rieck points out, and their relatives, if any, may not be in a position to render this type of assistance. Mr. Rieck writes in part:

It seems to me that this pension plan should be handled by the Government through taxation, but I believe that there would have to be institutions as well as a pension system. The institutions, of course, would be for those who could not be cared for among their own people, and the pension system for those who could be taken care of in their own homes.

II Corporations Favoring A System of Contributory Pensions

A contributory pension is generally one to which the pensioner himself, his employer, and in many cases the state or nation as well, each contribute a certain percentage of the cost of the pension. The contributions are generally deducted from the wages of the employees and are paid by the employer. The proportion of the contribution to the total cost made by each party vary in the different countries now operating under such plans. The principle of the contributory system in old age pensions is now applied in various forms in most countries which have old age pensions laws in force. Detailed studies of the various pensions' systems known to be in operation throughout the world at the present time, as the result of legislative enactment, are given in Chapter V of this report.

The Case For Contributory Pensions

The fundamental argument in favor of the contributory principle in providing a fund for pensions is that it will tend to stimulate thrift on the part of the prospective recipient of the pension and will promote and encourage the spirit of self reliance. There can be no suggestion of charity or pauperism, it is argued, in taking a pension which the person receiving it has helped to pay for. From the standpoint of public policy, the contributory method is advocated because it involves a minimum of indirect taxation and because the costs of the pension system are thus borne for the most part by those most directly concerned. The state, it is contended, will in the contributory plan find an economical method of providing against indigence in old age and eliminate great social wastage as the result of the lack of this provision, and also be able to reduce, in the long run, the costs of maintaining institutions for the care of paupers. The employer benefits by having a system which tends to support employee morale and he is provided with an effective, automatic and humane method of retiring elderly workers. The obligation which is now generally felt by most employers of labor towards making some provision for the old age of worn out employees can be discharged through a state-operated pension system on a contributory pension plan. The majority advocate a plan whereby the employer, the employee and the Commonwealth jointly contribute to its ultimate cost.

Arguments against contributory pensions are seldom based on theoretical grounds. The practical difficulties against putting this system into effect in this country where the mobility of labor is so extensive, are generally pointed to as impossible barriers in the adoption of a plan similar to those generally in practice in European countries. It is also argued that in the long run direct contributions from wages or taxes collected from the public in general, are paid by the same people and the enormous work involved in the collection and the recording of the contributions are only so much extra efforts. A direct tax upon all, preferably grader in accordance with income, it is pointed out by many, would seem a more simple method of procedure and would secure the same results.

A selection of typical, or outsanding letters from business men of the State supporting a contributory old age pension system is given here:

Tax Profits For Pensions Says Textile Manufacturer

The following letter indorsing a contributory system of old age pensions is from Mr. N. T. Folwell, president of Folwell, Bro. and Company, of Philadelphia. Mr. Folwell makes the interesting suggestion that employers should be obliged to contribute a certain proportion of net profits to a pension fund. Says this executive:

It is a very interesting problem you asked me to give you my opinion on. I have not only read your letter carefully but consulted some of our best minds on the subject.

We believe it should be a State affair in collecting and distributing money to the aged and helpless.

First, a certain percentage from each worker over the average cost of living of himself or family.

Now in regard to the employer, I believe he or they should contribute a percentage of their net profits to the aged pension fund.

Opinion Based on Expert Study

A most illuminating response to the questionnaire was from Mr. F. N. Russel, President of the United States Cast Iron and Pipe Foundry Company. Mr. Russel says his corporation came to the conclusion through an independent study, conducted by a specially qualified expert employed by the company for this purpose that a State pension system was a necessity both for the employer and the employee. Mr. Russel writes:

The question of taking care of aged workers in industry, and the pensioning of employees in our particular Company, has received our careful consideration over the last three years, we having appointed a Committee of our Board of Directors to investigate the problem, and if possible reach some solution of it: but, frankly, the more we studied the problem the less we felt able to undertake the obligations which would naturally follow. In the beginning, after looking into certain other plans, we felt that it would be advisable for us to employe somebody having had experience with these funds, and we therefore did employ, at a cost of several thousand dollars, an actuary who had had a wide and varied experience in handling both municipal and industrial pension plans. We then made a complete survey of all our employees, getting their history, ages, etc., and these were carefully studied by our actuary. We quickly came to the conclusion that the only plan which was financially possible for this Company to support was a contributory plan. We then found that by past experience in a contributory plan the large percentage of those who would participate were thirty-five and over, and that those under 35 generally disregarded any such suggestions so that as I said in the beginning, the more we have studied it the less we have come to a solution of the problem. Your letter bears out what we felt would be the outcome of our plan as originally contemplated.

Mr. Russel goes on to answer the question put to him by the Commission as follows:

Realizing all the objections, such as paternalism, lack of incentive to the individual employer's interests, and lack of incentive to remain with one organization, I believe that ultimately the solution of the problem will lie in State action, provided it can be properly safeguarded so that it will not further decrease the loyalty of the worker organization, and provided it would be possible to have all Industrial States take action along similar lines without too great a lapse of time.

I am in favor of a contributory plan by the employers and employees, to go into a Special Fund for such purpose.

Westinghouse Head Stresses Actuarial Difficulties

Mr. E. M. Herr, president of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, is in favor of a contributory pension plan if certain difficulties which he sees in the way of its practical application can be worked out. Mr. Herr definitely expresses disatisfaction with the pension scheme now in operation in his own estabilshment says Mr. Herr:

I do not believe in State Pensions for Old Age Dependency unless they are of a contributory character and worked out in such a way as to be on a thoroughly sound basis from an actuarial standpoint,

I realize so keenly the difficulty of providing sufficient resources for a pension plan of this sort that it does not seem to me to be justified as a direct obligation on tax payers. Furthermore, it would tend to make people less diligent in providing for their old age by their individual efforts. If, however, a contributory plan, in which the individual and the State can share on some basis that would make it actuarially sound, this might be desirable as providing for old age dependency.

I am not satisfied with the pension plan in our own corporation and am endeavoring to work out a plan along contributory lines, which I hope may be practicable, although we have not yet succeeded in working it out on a completely satisfactory basis.

Steel Company Executive Favors Contributory Plan

Mr. James O. Carr, vice president of the Allegheny Steel Company of Brackenridge and Pittsburgh would have the prospective pensioner contribute to the cost of the pension and proposes that an actuarial study be made to determine whether employers of labor should also make some contributions. Mr. Carr writes:

We have before us your communication with respect to the study of the subject of Old Age Pensions. We have given this matter a great deal of consideration during recent years and we have also had it up for discussion several times since the receipt of your communication.

This problem is one which is going to be very difficult of solution because there are so many conflicting interests involved. We cannot answer your questionnaire categorically nor to the extent which you desire. We do not believe that old age pensions should be handled by the State the same as workmen's compensation, nor do we believe that the people of the State would consider a tax industry such as this would involve. On the other hand inasmuch as the pensioner is the beneficiary under any plan of this kind it would seem as though he should contribute the amount necessary to establish the fund which is to afford him protection in his old age. Whether employers and the State should also contribute to such fund is a question which can only be accurately determined by ascertaining how much expense there is involved.

As we view this whole pension proposition it is entirely a question of dollars and cents without involving the matter of sentiment and we believe the only way in which it can be presented to the people of the State of Pennsylvania for their intelligent consideration is by showing them actually what burdens will fall upon them by the establishment of any pension plan.

This is not a matter impossible of accomplishment but on the other hand it would involve some expense which should be handled in an actuarial manner as this is the only method I know of by which it could be properly determined where the burden would be, as well as the benefits and we would like to see it worked out along these lines.

Says Theory of Straight Pensions Good But Has Not Worked Out in Practice

Mr. Grellet Collins, president of the Dill and Collins Company, of Philadelphia, is in favor of a contributory compulsory pension plan or a compulsory insurance law. Mr. Collins says that he believes the theory of a straight pension scheme is a good one but has not worked out successfully in England or Germany. The middle-aged person must not be penalized under any scheme that is woked out, Mr. Collins insists, or it will become virtually imposible for men and women past the prime of life to secure employment.

Contributory Plan Would Aid Casual Labor Says Building Contractor

Mr. George S. Fisher, secretary of L. H. Focht and Sons, Inc., of Reading, declares that in his view the majority of employers in his own industry are in favor of provision being made against dependency in old age but that many are unable to meet the need through voluntary efforts. The fact that building-trades labor must of necessity be casual for the most part makes it impossible for the employer, in the construction industry, to pay pensions in any but a very few cases. The writer holds the opinion, however, that the employer, simply because his labor turnover is constant, should not be relieved of his responsibility towards aged building trades work-people who have always been diligent and industrious even though conditions force them to change jobs continually. Under a compulsory contributory pension plan enacted by law, this correspondent argues, even the casual common laborer could be protected and each employer would make a payment to the pension fund on behalf of the individual in exact ratio to the length of time employed by the contractor be it long or short. Mr. Fisher writes:

We have given this matter serious thought and, like the majority of employers, we feel that something should be and must be done to insure the workers a means of livelihood when they reach the twilight of their working lives. It is easy to come to this conclusion, but the solving of the problem is indeed another matter, far from easy.

From our experience in the building business, where we have a large labor turnover, we do not see how the employer himself can set up a pension system. We are not like the large manufacturers who employ from year to year thousands of workers who remain constant in such employment even to twenty-five, thirty and forty years. On large construction jobs we employ additional men and at the completion of such jobs, very often have to let them go. Sometimes we never hear of them. Should such additional employees reach the age limit when the pension plan becomes operative, having worked only a few months in our employ, it would not be fair to us to have to shoulder the burden. It would be easy enough if they had worked for us a long period. But such is not the case. This is only one of the problems applying to workers in the construction business.

Therefore, we feel that any action taken should be on a State basis such as Workmen's Compensation, Mothers' Pension, etc.

We favor a contributory plan, the funds to be raised by the State, the employee and the employer. The idea of placing the burden upon only one of these three does not meet with our approval, regardless of which selection is made. In our opinion, the knowledge that the fund is made up mutually will tend to eliminate any serious controversy which would be likely if one or two clases were excluded from contributing. Another feature in favor of this plan is that with three classes contributing, the pro-rata contributions would be lower and should not be burdensome to any contributor.

Mr. Walter M. Schwartz, president of Proctor & Schwartz, Inc., Philadelphia, writes espousing a compulsory old age pension law either on a national scale or through cooperation by the different states. Mr. Schwartz believes that industry in this State might be forced to shoulder a handicap as against its competitors in other States if Pennsylvania were to adopt a pension system considerably in advance of other parts of the country:

I would be heartily in favor of Legislation making old age pensions compulsory, provided that such a law were national, or, if that is not possible, then cooperation between the different states.

I think there is grave danger that if the State of Pennsylvania passed such legislation and other states did not, it would bring about an increased cost to Pennsylvania manufacturers which would put them at a decided disadvantage in competition with manufacturers of other states.

Proposes Contributions be Based on Earnings

Mr. J. Canary, secretary of the Pennsylvania Cement Company, writes interestingly and at length in reply to the questionnaire from the New York sales offices of the concern. He urges, among other things, that employees should contribute to a pension plan according to their earnings but all should receive equal benefits on the theory that all workers, in the last analysis, do equally necessary work in spite of differences in pay. This business man raises the question of the eligibility of the female non-wage earner, the housewife, and the widow, to contribute to a pension fund to which the State shall also contribute. Say this executive:

My view is that provision for old age is wise. Whether it be through a pension system or through institutional work is the question. In many cases unless the workman makes provision for his non-earning years it must be done by the State. It may be begging the question; none-the-less it is the fact, that it becomes paternalistic when the state alone makes provision, and the workman passes on to society the problem of providing for him through its tax contribution. As a general rule no man should ask for help, nor should it be given, until he first helps himself if he is able, and to the extent that he may be able.

Answering the questions as put in the Commission's questionnaire this officer says:

A pension, as we understand the word, without contribution and by taxation alone is unjust and exceeds the duty of the government. The State may do this for institutional work with reason, and while that may be more costly per capita, none-the-less it is desirable that it be done that way. Many a man will soon tire of working if the State will support him at his own home, while if he has to enter an institution, submit to its discipline, etc., he will continue his usual work and enjoy what he will assert to be his freedom.

The contributory system is certainly a better plan. In fact the word "pension" is a poor one. State aid is better because it means the individual must do his share first and if necessary will be given aid. Pensions excite the man's cupidity to get what he needs from someone else, unless he contributes to that pension. In the latter case he is entitled to the funds of his own contribution, and maybe self denials, and holds his head up and is entitled to respect. He has worked for society, been paid, and desires independence, and willingly does what he can to secure it. This man, probably would do his best to remain self supporting even though an old age pension awaited him without any contribution. On the other hand, those unwilling though able to contribute, would be willing to age rapidly to attain a state of idleness without interrupting their daily habits.

Contributions should be compulsory. A man should be compelled to use all means in his power to support himself before calling on others. The man should be given an opportunity to make provision for old age and failing, he should face the results. Individual cases may easily contradict this view, but we are speaking of 25,000,000 workmen, now virile and active and also intelligent.

Thought might, however, be properly given to the situation as it exists. Some men receive larger return from labor than others though each fills a necessary place. Therefore, contribution should be made by a percentage of earnings without, however, any distinction or difference in the benefits to be received. That could be labor's contributions to itself—all contribute according to earnings, but all shall enjoy the benefits equally. If returns are to be measured by contributions we then have insurance, which unquestionably is the ideal way of solving the situation and though troublesome, perhaps, none-the-less is the way to build a nation of independent manhood rather than dependent serfs.

Voluntary Contributions to the State

Mr. S. Pemberton Hutchinson, president of the Westmoreland Coal Company writes from the Philadelphia headquarters of the corporation. Mr. Hutchinson says:

I believe in a contributory system wherein contributions are made by the State and all citizens who wish to become beneficiaries in their old age. This system should be on a voluntary basis, Mr. Hutchinson urges.

Suggests Pensions be Based Upon Dependency

Mr. Irving L. Wilson, president of Jacob Reed's and Sons of Philadelphia, states that in his view it will be necessary for the State to take action towards meeting the problem of dependency in old age. Mr. Wilson prefers some sort of insurance system for old age pensions. The plan of this executive is as follows:

We do not favor a plan which might encourage the beneficiary to be extravagant during his earning period, with a view to becoming entirely dependent on the state in his old age. Rather it seems to us that some plan should be devised by which the beneficiary will contribute a specified share toward a premium to pay for old age insurance, it being determined at the maturity of his policy whether he was dependent on the insurance and if not so dependent he is to receive only a share of his insurance, pro rata to the extent in which he had participated in the premiums. In this way the participant or beneficiary would be encouraged to invest something toward his declining years, which would be payable to him, perhaps with some interest, whether he needed such assistance at that time or not, and the State should not be obligated beyond the participant's investment unless it appeared at the time that he was dependent and needed the relief.

Wants Burden Distributed

Mr. W. H. Alexander, Treasurer of the Eastern Bituminous Coal Mining Bonds of Philadelphia, is in favor of a compulsory contributory pension system. He says:

I believe that old age should be liberally provided for, and that if at all possible, contributions toward that end should be compulsory, in order that the few who are willing to contribute should not be compelled to bear the entire burden.

Glad State is Awakening to Responsibilities

Mr. Simon Miller, President of the Jacob Miller's and Sons Company of Philadelphia, commends the State for awakening to what the writer believes to be its responsibilities in the matter of pensions for the indigent aged—Mr. Miller says:

It is a good sign that the State is awakening to its responsibility and I trust your labor will result in putting upon the statue books a workable and equitable plan.

Mr. Miller's preference for a Contributory pension system are stated as follows:

Any State plan should require the contributions of all parties based on employment of all males over 18 years of age; on all females over 28 years of age. The basis of this thought lies in the fact that males going into industry is predicated upon the theory that their productive years will be given to industry, whilst the employment of females is only a stop-gap until such time as they marry.

Mr. Miller makes an important point in the following observation:

One great advantage of a pension system would be the removal of the fear of employers, that engaging a man in middle life entails a moral obligation to take care of such an employee in old age. The employment office would not so often answer "too old" to men of 40 or 50 years of age. In other words, the productive average age would be increased and society thereby benefited.

Jacob D. Lit urges Compulsory Contributory Pension Plan

Mr. Jacob D. Lit, head of the Lit Department Store of Philadelphia, indorses a contributory pension plan in which the State, the employers and employees shall participate.

Mr. A. B. Wykoff, head of the Wykoff Department Store in Stroudsburg, also indorses this plan for provision against dependency in old age.

Mr. E. D. David, assistant treasurer of The Charles E. Hires Company of Philadelphia, favors legislation establishing a compulsory contributory pension plan in which the State, employer and employee shall share the cost.

Voting Should be Qualification for Pension

Mr. B. W. Ken, President of the Railway and Industrial Engineering Company, Greensburg, says that he is opposed to such "paternalistic" legislation as an old age pension law but goes on to state that if such a measure is adopted in this State it should be on a contributory basis. A contributory scheme if adopted should be compulsory, Mr. Ken points out.

Mr. Ken thinks a pension plan framed on the principle of the Workmen's Compensation Act might produce a workable scheme, but in that case "all possible beneficiaries should contribute." No person should be entitled to an old age pension, Mr. Ken believes, unless he voted regularly at all elections. If a poll tax were established to pay for pensions, this would provide a ready means of checking up on vote dodgers, Mr. Ken observes.

State Action Needed to Force Issue

Mr. F. N. Foote, Vice-president of The Venango Manufacturing Company of Franklin, believes that state action will be necessary to "force the issue" and to secure the general establishment of a contributory old age pension fund or a system of insurance. Mr. Foote warns that it will be necessary to set up regulations making the contributions assessed upon the employer "moderate."

Would Remove Feeling of Charity

Mr. Albert Walton, President of J. W. Paxson Company, Philadelphia, in speaking of legislation to establish a contributory pension plan on a state wide system, writes:

This plan is far better than that of requiring individual action by employers of labor, as it would be more comprehensive; it would cover those cases of aged employees working for firms of every limited capital, as well as individuals and partnerships not possessing sufficient income to properly and safely establish reserves to take care of old employees.

We prefer the contributory system, as such removes to a great extent the feeling on the part of the pensioned the fact that they are recipients of charity. This active working life gives them a degree of satisfaction they would not possess under a non-contributory plan. It would also be a much better economical proposition.

We would be in favor of a compulsory plan of the above character as we have little faith in one proving successful based upon a voluntary basis.

Iron Company Favors Plan

Mr. S. O. Klingilhofer, Secretary of The Pittsburgh Bridge and Iron Works, Pittsburgh, is in agreement with the proposal for a compulsory contributory old age pension plan through state action. As an alternative plan, Mr. Klingilhofer would favor an insurance system modeled along the lines of the Pennsylvania Workmen's Compensation Act.

Fears Added Costs of Manufacture

Mr. Harry Read, President of The Read Machinery Company, York, states clearly and frankly that the principal difficulty they see in putting an old age pension law into effect is the possible addition to the cost of manufactured goods. Mr. Read assumes that there must be a sharp increase in taxes to provide funds for pensions if legislation along these lines goes into effect. Never-the-less, Mr. Read is in favor of a compulsory contributory pension fund to which the employer and employee only shall contribute and which shall be under Federal control. Mr. Read says:

There can be no question as to old age pensions being a worthy cause, and a move for the good of humanity; the only question concerning its application is to what must be the wages of employees, and the earnings of manufacturers and business men, if these added taxes must be provided for.

With increases in taxation for various and numerous worthy causes still open, it must mean that laborers and workers must be paid increased wages, and correspondingly, manufacturers must obtain increased prices for their manufactured products.

The matter of Old Age Pension is worthy, and being somewhat familiar with the methods in use in Great Britain and Germany, I am a believer that so far the best result is the plan of employers and employees contributing to a special fund for the purpose.

Suggests Penslon of Dollar a Day

Mr. Howard Coonley, President of The Walworth Company, writing from the General offices of the corporation in Boston, goes on record in favor of a compulsory contributory pension plan, if possible by a Federal enactment rather than only state-wide. Mr. Coonley suggests that the Old Age Pension be $1.00 per day and thinks contributions should be made by the State or Nation, the employer and employee.

Own Pension Fund on Safe Basis but Favors State Action

Mr. Theodore Ahrens, President of the Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Company, writes from the General offices of the concern in Pittsburgh in favor of a contributory pension scheme. Mr. Ahrens is one of those executives who believes in state action despite the fact that his company maintains its own pension system. He stresses the fact that his corporation feels it must maintain its aged workers in the absence of a state pension system. His letter reads in part:

I favor a system of insurance or pension for aged men and women who could qualify for this by attaining a certain age, citizenship, etc. These pensions to be paid out of a fund to which the employers, the employees and the State would contribute.

The Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Company has operated a Pension Fund for over 12 years. . . . So long as there is no statewide plan or fund to take care of old and disabled employees we feel that it is our duty to do so, and have been doing this for 12 years.

Mr. Ahrens sends the Commission along with his own letter a comprehensive memorandum drawn up at the request of the corporation by Mr. John C. Reed, a veteran official of the Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Company, who is secretary of the Pension Fund of the Corporation. The President of the company substantially indorses Mr. Reeds views which are in part as follows:

When we admit to ourselves, and put that admission into industrial practice—that mind combined with brawn, is the only creative power in the material affairs of man, and that it constitutes our sole and only means of providing for the material existence of the race, we shall have made some progress towards a rational and enduring solution of the problem submitted to you by the Commission.

When industry acquires inert materials for its conduct, it does not pay for an optional part of what has been delivered to it, and demand to be excused from payment to those who furnished that material because it can obtain other material it considers more advantageous to it. The law absolutely demands and enforces that the purchaser pay for all the seller has delivered.

When industry employs the manual energy of man, and by its own admission has used it all, it ought not to be excused from paying for all that it has used....Justice demands the same equity for the seller of human energy and brawn that it exacts for the owner of inert material—the payment in full, for all delivered.

Industrial Pensions Cause Displacement of Workers At Earlier Ages

Mr. Reed goes on to show how pensions have aided the efficient operation of some industries:;

The protest of an awakened conscience in the people has penetrated the deaf ear of efficiency, maintained at the expense of the human factor in industry, and has compelled industry to seek a defense. That defense industry has found in a dependent pension system which, instead of being for the relief for the human factor in industry, has been made the most valuable ally of a more and more rigid efficiency.

The protest of the people was against the discarding of the worn-out human material of industry, that efficiency deemed necessary to condemn to idleness, to maintain a higher efficiency, and without any provision for the welfare of those dismissed, or even of any provision for their existence. These dimissed inefficients become the dependents of the people, and not of industry, which repudiated responsibility in any degree. And to the extent that those dismissed are not supported by industry, private enterprise is conducted at the general expense.

Executives demand efficiency in managers—managers exact efficiency from superintendents—superintendents from foremen, and foremen from workmen. It was discovered that the pension was more efficient than the toleration of any lessened degree of efficiency in the wage earner, and that the pension could be made the strongest support of the efficiency of management by weeding out the last vestige of inefficiency that, to an extent, without the pension, its strongest advocates never before had the courage to enforce.

So that a large number of wage-earners, rightly or wrongly suspected of inefficiency, upon the sole judgment of their superiors, were released on pensions as soon as they became otherwise eligible. So that to the former limited crop of inefficients by age, has been added their suspected companions. This will be found to be true because of the enormous increase in pension rolls where this has occurred, and not because employees age more speedily now than formerly, or because they become inefficient earlier than when the pension roll was started.

Another Philadelphian Urges Contributory Pensions

Mr. Edward Morton, Asst. Secretary of The Henry H. Sheip Manuf. Company, Philadelphia, favors a contributory pension system to be paid by the employer and employees only.

Any pension system contemplates aiding those not in need and therefore should be contributory so that there should be no question as to the propriety of accepting the pension whether or not in need of it.

Would Prevent "Lay-Offs"

Mr. T. H. Uptegraff, Vice-president of the Pittsburgh Wall Paper Company is in favor of a compulsory contributory state pension system but advocates that the employees and the State only should contribute to the pension fund. Mr. Uptegraff believes that the employer would pay his share through added taxation. This executive argues that such a pension system would tend to enable employers to lay-off fewer workers during periods of business depression. He writes on this point as follows:

If employees and state contribute the funds necessary to carry on a pension system in times of business depressions, manufacturers would not lay off men and women to save wages and pension payments but would endeavor to keep employed those employees contributing to the pension system.

Mr. Lessing Rosenwald Favors Compulsory Contributory Pension Plan

Mr. Lessing Rosenwald, President of Sears, Roebuck and Company, Philadelphia, speaking for himself and not for the Company as a whole, favors state action to establish a contributory pension system if provision is made to exempt such industries as have already established pension funds which pay at least the minimum amount under the State controlled system. Mr. Rosenwald would have the employer and employee bear the full cost of old age pensions.

Additional Indorsements Of The Contributory Plan

Preference for contributory old age pension plans are also expressed by The Roller-Smith Company of Bethlehem and by President C. Mahln Kline of The Smith, Kline & French Company of Philadelphia.

Would Compel Employee And Employer To Contribute Towards Pensions

Mr. Jack L. Straub, President of The Bearings Company of America, Lancaster, is in favor of a compulsory state supervised (or Federal) contributory pension plan. Mr. Straub would have the employer and employee bear the cost.

Suggests Funds Be Raised In Same Manner As School Taxes

The Assistant Treasurer of The Booth-Flinn Limited, Pittsburgh, favors a compulsory contributory insurance plan to be paid by the State, county, city and borough in the same manner as the funds are raised for schools. His suggestions are as follows:

The plan should be compulsory for everybody. The State, county, city, borough, etc., should share to relieve its own burden. Just how people or individuals should be divided from county, city and borough tax, I don't see but non-property owners should bear some of the burden because they usually need this law most of all.

Believe Plan Must Be Compulsory

President E. S. Hoopes of the Union Drawn Steel Company, Beaver Falls, believes that only a compulsory plan can be made successful. He prefers a contributory plan supported by employers and employees.

Another endorsement of the compulsory contributory principle is made by J. A. Sucker, President of the Lewisburg Chair Corporation, Lewisburg. Mr. Sucker says:

We strongly favor the plan of all three groups contributing and that the provision be mandatory and not dependent upon the option of any of the interested parties.

Mr. R. V. Mattison, President of the Keasbey & Mattison Company, Ambler, also says that in his judgment a system of contributions made by the state, employers and employees is the best feasible plan to be suggested.

The President of the Union Paving Company, Philadelphia, indorses the same principle and suggests that contributions "should be something as follows: State 20 per cent; employer 30 per cent; and employee 50 per cent. The employees contributions might be graduated to conform to his age or proportional to his actual net earnings as in United States Income Tax."

Says Consuming Public Should Ultimately Carry Cost

The consuming public should indirectly, carry the cost of a compulsory contributory old age pension system writes Mr. Frederick Willson, President of Willson Goggles, Inc., Reading. Mr. Willson advocates that contributions should be paid by the employer and employee only but as the result of a Federal enactment enforcing such action. The cost of the pension system should be added to the cost of production and thus be distributed among the general public.

Radio Concern Favors Contributory Pension Plan

Mr. R. F. Perrott, Employment Manager of the Atwater Kent Manufacturing Company believes that an employer should contribute to an old age pension fund "in some proportion to his total payroll." Mr. Perrott says:

It seems that those things which are given to individuals of the working class without any attendant responsibility on their part are considered very lightly. For this reason the writer believes that part of the income of An Old Age Pension Fund should come from workers themselves, probably as a direct deduction by the employer from their wages. The employer of labor, we believe, should also contribute to such a fund in some proportion to his total payroll.

The writer would not venture to forward any opinion as to whether or not the state should contribute, other than the expense of supervising the operation of such a system

Would Make For Better Industrial Relations

Mr. F. E. Troutman, President of the Standard Plate Glass Company, points out that a compulsory contributory pension plan "would make for a better relation, or feeling between the employee and employer."

Public Appreciates Value Of Mutual Assistance

Mr. A. M. Oppenheimer, President of The Appolo Steel Company, of Appollo, believes that public opinion has now become sufficiently enlightened in all states to appreciate the value of mutual aid in the provision of old age pensions. Mr. Oppenheimer advocated a contributory pension plan. He writes in part:

We should adopt a Pension Plan in all States at the earliest possible time. A plan of this kind will relieve many persons and families of the constant fear of what may be facing them or their relatives in old age. We are ready for the adoption of some reasonable system of pensions now, as the people, generally, are beginning to understand the value of mutual help and cooperation in matters of this kind.

Philadelphia Department Head Sees Advantage In Contributory Plan

President Morris L. Clothier of Strawbridge & Clothier, Philadelphia, after stating the problems encountered in their own contributory pension plan points out the advantages of a general old age pension plan as follows:

We must agree with the conclusions reached by those who have gone more thoroughly into the matter, that such (private pension) associations are by no means perfect, and it would seem that we must, sooner or later, face the necessity of adopting a scientific system under State control, supported by contributions by employer and employee, perhaps with provisions for a stabilizing appropriation from general State funds—similar to the plan of Great Britain referred to in your circular letter.

Such a plan probably would not require any larger contributions from employees, and not much larger contributions from employers, than we, for example, are now paying—with the advantage of assured permanency and of continuous protection to those going from one employment to another.

III Corporations Preferring Voluntary Industrial Action

Pennsylvania Railroad Favors "A More Economical And Humane Administration"

The questionnaire addressed by the Commission to the President of the Pennsylvania Railroad System elicited a reply from Mr. G. L. Peck, Vice-president of the company, in charge of the personnel department.

Mr. Peck says that current methods of caring for the indigent aged in Pennsylvania are unsatisfactory, and urges that the State should provide for those who through unforunate circumstances have been unable to provide for themselves. Mr. Peck's communication is, in part, as follows:

I believe.....that it is generally agreed that our present State system of providing relief to indigent aged and infirm is far from being satisfactory and any plan to promote a more economical, efficient and humane admisistration than at present exists, should merit the approval of all citizens.

Speaking of the difficulties involved in the establishment of a contributory pension plan in private industry, Mr. Peck goes on to say:

We believe that the difficulties in the way of inaugurating a contributory system, where in the employers and employees contribute, are serious. One objection to the contributory system is the accrued liability incurred at the inauguration of such a plan. If a pension system were founded simultaneously with the assembling of a group of employees, the matter would be very simple, for such an enterprise starts with young men. But this is never done. It is only when men, grown old in the service, begin to arrive at an age when they ought to retire that serious consideration is given to the question of adopting a pension system. The problem by this time has become vastly more complex. The service contains men of all ages. Many employees will contribute little before they retire; the majority will not contribute half of what will eventually be paid by the young men just entering employment. Another practical objection to the contributory system and one equally serious, is the difficulty of fixing and enforcing rates of contribution that are equitable and adequate. Still another objection is the difficulty and expense of keeping an accurate individual account for each man.

Keeps Old Employees At Work

Mr. H. W. Taylor, President of W. C. Hamilton and Sons of Miquon, writes to the Commission in favor of voluntary action by private concerns as a universal method of caring for the indigent aged. Mr. Taylor's letter is as follows:

We are not in favor of a plan that contemplates other than voluntary action on the part of the individual plants. We have this problem constantly before us and we have thus far been able to handle it satisfactorily so far as the older employees are concerned by giving them work in the plant which is suited to their strength. We think this method is to be preferred to one which supplies doles without any return of work on the part of the recipient.

Watch Company Head Prefers Contributory Plan On Voluntary Basis

Mr. R. E. Miller, Vice-president, of The Hamilton Watch Company, Lancaster, says:

In the first place, I think the suggestions which I might make and the thought which I might have given to this matter will be so slight compared with that which may be arrived at by a commission intelligently studying the problem from all angles, and I am hesitant to even make a suggestion, realizing that it must be an opinion formed on very limited knowledge.

Mr. Miller goes on to state however, that:

Our opinion in this matter is very strong that a contributory system of employer and employee contributing jointly on some equitable basis toward the cost of carrying a pension system is the best plan,.....I believe that a plan can best be met by a proper division of employer and employee sharing in the establishment of a pension sinking fund.

Further Indorsement Of Above Suggestion

Mr. Jas. B. Douglas, Manager, Insurance Department of the United Gas Improvement and Associated Interests in Philadelphia, declares that while they are impressed with the present policies offered by insurance companies for providing group annuities to employees they prefer a contributoy system as between employers and employees only. He states his conclusions as follows:

We regard as best a plan conducted by the employer and providing a fair annuity, to be increased through contributions by employees of certain percentages of their wages or salaries, at the option of the employees.

Distinguishes Between Large And Small Corporations

President B. Dangerfield, Jr., of Reymer & Brothers, Pittsburgh prefers a contributory pension plan by industries for the following reasons:

It seems to us that this is a question which really should be solved by every corporation for itself, as the conditions are hardly identical in any two corporations. By this we mean that the small corporation with possibly a few hundred employees does not come in the same category as some of the larger corporations with as many thousand employees. Also, there are some corporations which are always looking out for the welfare of their employees and the record of their treatment of employees in the past is sufficient guarantee to their present employees that they also will be taken care of in their old age.

Many small corporations such as our own, while they have not installed any fixed system of pensions, have, nevertheless, been in business so long that employees who have been with them for many years and who are gradually becoming less able to do their accustomed work are taken care of in the way that is best suited to their individual needs.

The point we are trying to make is this: that such corporations where the employees are considered individually should not be placed in the same category as larger corporations where individual consideration is an impossibility.

We realize that the ideas which we have advanced herein are very limited and are based entirely on our own experience, but we do not see how it is possible to work out a system of old age pensions which would be equally applicable to all businesses, either contributory or non-contributory; nor are we at all in favor of compulsory retirement at a certain age, as is the usage in so many pension systems.

Heinz Company For Industrial Pensions

Mr. Howard Heinz, of Pittsburgh, head of the famous food products company of that name, is of the opinion that employers should provide for their employees when too old to work. A communication from Mr. Heinz is, in part, as follows:

The solution of the pension does not lie in state action.... employers should make provision to take care of their employees in their old age....Some of the pensions plans have been failures,.....but if scientifically worked out and financed, they would be better for society as a whole than the state plan.

Chain Store Company Head Favors Private Pensions

Mr. Samuel Robinson, Pres. of the American Stores Company, Philadelphia, declares:

I believe that all companies should take care of those who have grown old in their employ.

IV Employers Who Are Opposed To Any State Action

The Arguments Against Old Age Pensions

Almost all opposition to a more constructive program of relief for the aged by business men of this state, in so far as the Commission has been able to elucidate from the replies to the questionnaire, seems to be motivated mainly by the fear of increased taxation. That an old age pension system will involve tremendous additional costs seems to be taken for granted by all those writers; and among opponents of old age pensions there seems to be a complete lack of any information regarding the estimated costs of pension legislation made by previous state commissions studying the subject. The question of taxation is presented, however, in a rather ambiguous manner. Fear of increasing the cost of manufactured products, or of making the operating costs in industry greater are generally given as reasons for a critical attitude towards old age pensions. Many other opponents to this legislation ascribe their opposition to such state action on the grounds that such aid to the aged would be harmful to the moral character, spirit of independence, and the thrifty habits of the wage-earning classes.

A number of business men react to this question by a denunciation of the politician and of politics, claiming that old age pensions would inevitably become a "political football" and would tend to develop a bureaucracy in this country. Other opponents discuss the disavantages of private pension funds stressing their actuarial weaknesses and assume that a state system would necessarily suffer from the same defects. There are also those employers of labor for whom the question of taxation is not so important as what they call the danger of "paternalism" and socialism" or "Bolshevism" in government. There is a strong resentment evident in many such employers at the suggestion that the state take over the role of benefactor to the worker which the employer feels that he is now filling. Others also argue that the conditions in this country are so different from European countries that there is no need for such legislation here.

Fear Of The "Dole"

One peculiar fact which the letters to the Commission bring out is the extraordinary effect made on the minds of many business men in this State by the sensational articles in the press of this country attributing the cause of the British general strike to the so-called "dole system." This questionnaire was sent out in the Spring of 1926, and was being answered during the the time that the general strike situation in England was crowding the front pages of almost every daily paped in America. For one reason or another wide-spread circulation was given to the idea that the "dole" was in some way responsible for these disturbed conditions. Investigations at first hand by this Commission and many other bodies have established the fact that there has never been any serious criticism in either England or any other European country from any quarter against the principles of old age pension laws in those countries. Old Age pensions abroad have clearly achieved the status of recognized institutions and are regarded by all citizens as matters about which there is no dispute in principle. In most countries the entire working population is compelled to make direct contributions to these pension and every stigma of charity is eliminated. The entire system is generally based upon the insurance principle, pure and simple. Pensions for the aged are accepted as a permanent part of the whole social systems prevailing in these countries.

Typical expressions of opponents to old age pensions are as follows:

"Would Destroy Moral Fibre"

Mr. F. C. Biggert, President of The United Engineering and Foundry Company of Pittsburgh, makes a sweeping attack on the proposal to establish old age pension by law. His arguments, in brief, is that such relief would destroy the moral fibre of the American people. But, like many other staunch opponents of old age pensions, Mr. Biggert evidently believes that such legislation is inevitable and he outlines certain qualifications, or conditions, which he believes should be included in any pension bill. Mr. Biggert's letter is, in part, as follows:

We admit that our public charities are far from an ideal means of providing for our needy aged people, but no ideal method can be devised and the public charities have one great advantage in that they are resorted to only as a last resource. In other words, the very fact that the public charities are not ideal, is their greatest recommendation, because it largely prevents their abuse.

You say that numerous European countries have adopted old age pensions, but how long have these pensions been in existence? If any have been in existence for a considerable time, has this been under republican or monarchistic Government, and what are the conditions of life in these countries as compared to ours?

We do not know the answer to the first two of these questions, but they are all pertinent questions. There can be no doubt that over a long period the pensions will become as burdensome to a state or nation as they have proven to be to some of the industries which have tried them. They will work out better under a monarchistic government than in a republic, because the voice of the people is not so powerful in the former case. The pensioners do not vote.

We do not approve of any form of old age pension, but since it is probable that it will be necessary to try the experiment before we get back to our senses, we would like to propose a clause to be inserted in the pension bill. Our proposal is that, Before an aged person be given a pension, their children and grand-children be notified of the proposed pension and advised that if it is granted, they will be deprived of the franchise on the grounds of criminal negligence in not supporting their parents. This would help to prevent abuse of the pension and should reduce the number of needy aged people by inducing their children to do their duty.

Incidentally, this proposal would take some of the political sugar out of the old age pension bureau.

And, now, we hope you will not think that we are hard because we do not approve of this benevolently intended scheme. We recognize the necessity of protecting both young and aged needy people under circumstances which make it impossible for them to support themselves, but we believe that under present conditions, and under any conditions which seem likely to arise in this country, this can best be done by private initiative with the help of existing public and private charities. And we further believe that any System of Old Age Pensions which may be instituted by the State will so far discourage thrift that ultimately it will become a grievous public burden.

Describes Pension As "Socialistic Measure"

Mr. Alex Laughlin, Jr., President of The Central Tube Company, Pittsburgh writes:

I am very much opposed to such a socialistic measure as you propose. When you ask how to solve the problem of Old Age Dependency you might as well also ask how to solve the problem of poverty.

Unless one is blind to the material progress which the world has made in the last one hundred and particularly the twenty-five years, one would be inclined to think that the World is gradually approaching the solution of these problems in a slow sure manner.

Don't Believe In Old Age Pensions

Mr. W. S. Bond, President of The Weaver Piano Company of York, Penna., in reply to the first question in the Old Age Pension Commission's questionnaire states emphatically: "Don't believe in Old Age Pension." However, in replying to question No. 4, Mr. Bond, in discussing a contributory pension plan, insists that it would be cheaper for an employer in the long run to pay the whole cost of a pension plan for his employees. For the detailed routine of collecting payments from employees would be, in his view more expensive to the management to operate than the actual amount required for both shares.

Should Be Left To "Family Ties Or Community Life"

Mr. J. P. Allen, President of The Union Steel Casting Company, Pittsburgh, believes that the care of the aged under modern conditions can still be left to "family ties or community life." Mr. Allen says:

I am opposed to any legislation establishing old pensions in this State. A real race of people with the natural resources which we have, can take care of their aged people through family ties or community life.

One big job for men in public life is to be sincere in their efforts to secure for every man an equal chance as against every other man, and to reduce the cost of government, which is entirely too high.

I trust that you will not misconstrue the more or less terse form of this letter as meant to be antagonistic to your Commission. It is only an expression of personal opinion, which is evidently out of harmony with your thought on this subject.

Says State Cannot Succeed Where Industries Fail

Mr. D. E. Jackman, Treasurer of Firth-Sterling Steel Company, McKeesport, writing for the officers of his corporation says that if private industry cannot solve the problem of ald age pensions the State cannot succeed in so doing. Mr. Jackman writes:

We are not in sympathy with the plan of having the State operate a pension system for the aged, as such a plan would be too full of opportunities for those selfishly inclined and who did not have the best interests of the State at heart.

We believe citizens of the State of Pennsylvania who have become incapacitated and who are without means, will be looked after by relatives, friends and business associates far better than through any State Government Plan.

If the great industries of America have failed to solve the question of old age pensions we have little faith in the State succeeding.

Attacks Pension Proposal As Destroying Initiative

Mr. H. B. Ayers, President of The H. K. Porter Company, Pittsburgh, is another one of the out-andout opponents of old age pensions. Mr. Ayers argues:

A Pension of this sort cannot help tending to destroy initiative, and surely will be a detriment in the attempt at saving for a rainy day. Frugality should be encouraged instead of being discouraged, as it would be with a pension of this sort held up as a reward for lack of energy and over spending during what should be producing years.

The writer has cared for himself since he was eleven and takes some pride in the fact; he is willing to help where disaster has overtaken some unfortunate, but is unalterably against paying taxes for a pension fund which will necessarily work against initiative, frugality and self respect on the one hand and built up a system of fat jobs for politicians on the other.

British General Strike Cited

An example of the far reaching effects which superficial and improperly informed newspaper reporting has on the minds of American readers can be seen from the following communication. Mr. W. B. Crane, President of Crane Brothers Inc., Kingston, seems to feel that assistance to the aged played a part in bringing about the disturbed industrial conditions in Great Britan. Mr. Crane writes:

As a rule people do not work and become efficient in their work simply because they love it.

To our mind, an old age pension except possibly in a very special and restricted form, not only supplies a crutch for the individual to lean on, but makes a very good excuse for relatives who might be responsible to relieve themselves and relax any and all effort on their part, thus helping to produce more loafers and vagabonds.

Perhaps England is the best example of paternalism in its various forms including mine subsidies, unemployment doles, etc., in Europe to which you refer, and surely her present dilemma which we feel pertty certain that Premier Baldwin would say, if he were to express an opinion, is largely a result of these things and which, ,to say the least. is not of a character to promote envy.

We are not prepared to even suggest a solution of the problem in question,.....any old age pension which would meet approval would have to be very much restricted, in fact so much so, as to possibly make it impractical, politically at any rate.

Fears Tax Burden On Industry

Mr. George A. Smith of The Pittsburgh-Des Moines Steel Company, Pittsburgh, in a brief letter says:

In our opinion such legislation would be very objectionable and would place a tax burden on industry and thrifty citizens and encourage laziness and carelessness on the part of a large percentage of our population.

"Undermines Independence And Destroys Thrift"

Mr. H. B. Rust, President of The Koppers Company, Pittsburgh, takes the familiar position that the provision of old age pensions would destroy the practice of thrift. The letter is, in substance, as follows:

I have every sympathy for needy, aged persons and we must, of course, make provisions for taking care of such persons. This, I feel, should be done largely as at present, —in municipal institutions and by charitable organizations. I doubt very much whether conditions would be greatly bettered through any system under which pensions were provided generally for aged people.

While there must, of course, be exceptions, I believe that most of the old age need is due to lack of thrift and lack of foresight. If we provide a general pension system, it would seem to me to discourage the practice of thrift, and this is just exactly what we don't want to do.

I imagine that if the Commonwealth would provide facilities for furnishing free meals to all hungry people, the incentive to work would gradually diminish, and if it establishes pensions for all needy, aged people, it would seem to me that all incentive for saving would also be destroyed. The fact that in some established industrial pension funds, the costs "grow increasingly more burdensome" would seem to bear out my contentions.

"Put Premium On Laziness"

President O. D. Sabold of The Colebrookdale Iron Company, Pottstown, writes to the Commission in reply to the questionnaire as follows:

We do not approve of old age pensions in any form. We believe the greatest good to the greatest number is obtainable by a return to the first principles of thrift and industry rather than by the adoption of any panacea for making life easier for the indifferent and incompetent.

In our opinion "old age pension" would prove nothing short of a premium on laziness with many thousands of people in Pennsylvania. The writer says this from his own experience in employing labor for the last thirty years.

Most any man, (excepting a coal miner of which there are too many and who do not care for any other occupation because of the high daily mine wage) could always get work if he wanted it, and at 225 to 330 per cent higher wages than before the war. Labor has never had such opportunities to earn and save as during the last 7 years, but this prosperity created much extravagance and many indifferent people.

Why should the industrious and thrifty be taxed to pay the lazy and indifferent after they can no longer work? and we venture to say a very large percentage of this class would be found on the old age pension list.

Praise Compensation, Concern Pensions

Praise for the Workmen's Compensation Law of Pennsylvania and denunciation of a proposal for old age pensions is frequently coupled in the letters received by the Commission. The writers claim that the Principle of the two laws is entirely different. Assistance to a person who has been injured is declared to be in an altogether different category from assistance to the man who can no longer work because industry has no place for him. Mr. H. D. Sheppard, President of Sheppard & Myers Inc., Hanover, is one of those who take this position. Mr. Sheppard writes:

We consider it socialistic and fraternalistic and un-American. We have county poorhouses to take care of such people as have to be taken care of and why encourage people to spend all of their money for gasoline and depend on the State to take care of them later on.

England now has her dole system, which is probably the greatest curse she has ever been afflicted with. Why should the people work when the government pays them almost as much for not working? We feel that either national or state fraternalism is the first step toward Russianism and certainly cannot believe in it. Never destroy a man's initiative and his desire to depend upon himself and upon his own efforts, and when we do, we later become a dead nation.

We feel that this has no relation whatever to industrial accidents. We firmly believe in the Workmen's Compensation Law and we feel that Pennsylvania has one of the greatest ones in existence. We feel that all such accidents should be a burden on the industry and not on the individual worker.

Says Relatives Should Provide

Mr. Severn P. Ker, President of The Sharon Steel Hoop Company, Sharon, states the case against old age pension as follows:

I am unalterably opposed to any legislation establishing old age pensions because such legislation destroys the sense of responsibility, initiative and every ideal of independent manhood that is worth encouraging in the citizen. Men working in industries are no different from men working in offices, stores, at the practice of law or medicine, school teachers, officials of corporations or any other class of citizens. If they lack frugality, intelligence and capacity and ability to provide for themselves in their declining years, or if by accident or ill health or misfortune which could not have reasonably been avoided they are unable to provide for themselves in old age then it is the duty of their children, their families and relations or others belonging to them or connected or associated with them to provide for them. This has always been done in the past and will continue to be done in the future unless unutterably foolish and destructive legislation says not only to those who are naturally improvident but to all people: "waste your time and your substance all of your life and your government will reward you for your thoughlessness, extravagance and viciousness by seeing that you are provided for during your old age." Such Legislation stimulates Improvidence and bad Citizenship does not stimulate good Citizenship.

The majority of the wage-earners of this State and this Country are independent, fearless, self-respecting men; and visionary politicians and vicious legislators are doing more to disturb them mentally and corrupt them in their citizenship than all other influences of which I know combined.

I hope this great State will never pass such vicious, destructive and immoral legislation.

Please do not consider this as written by one who has either had his past provided for by others or his future assured, for such is not the case. I have been working for my own support and contributing to the support of others since I was twelve years of age. I have the greatest respect for workers of every class and my earnest desire to see them left alone as self-respecting citizens, kept free from socialistic and paternalistic laws classifying them as incompetent and setting aside those who work with their hands from those who work with their brains. I hope the continued pressure from impracticable visionaries or from those seeking selfaggrandizement will not result in legislation in this country that will reduce us socially to the conditions in England and some other countries.

I prefer no system of this kind. The State Workmen's Compensation Law is entirely another matter and when based upon and administered upon the theory that industry conducted for profit should not be permitted to throw those incapacitated by accident in their operations for profit back on society but that the reasonable care of such cases is a legitimate part of the cost of production and when all idea of penalty is eliminated then the Workmen's Compensation Law is proper and desirable. The Workmen's Compensation Law of this State, as a general thing, is good but this question has no relation to old age pension or any other form of socialism under law which will inevitably destroy popular government if indulged in.

Pension is Socialistic

Mr. Thomas K. Creal, General Manager of The Warren Furniture Company, Warren, writes as follows:

We are opposed to the Pension as it is Socialistic and in the countries where it is in force it pays a premium on inefficiency and shiftlessness. This is a country of opportunity and there is no excuse for dependency in old age, which can be provided for either by family ties or by competence accumulated. There is now a way provided for taking care of people who are unable to take care of themselves and while it is not as pleasant as a pension would be, at the same time it does not put a premium on carelessness.

We wish to go on record as opposed to any old age pension system of any kind paid by public taxation.

Favors Private Pensions

Mr. A. H. Cline, Jr., Secretary and General Manager of The United States Sanitary Manufacturing Company, Pittsburgh, contends:

Old age pension supported by the state, to my mind, bring too much paternalism into our Government and is not appreciated or wanted by the intelligent laboring class and is not the basis upon which the American prosperity and independence has been built; it savors too much of the dole of England, from which they are at the present time reaping a harvest in the very great dissatisfaction of their labor, resulting in this general strike.

The pension fund for workers or employees of any particular firm or industry, which is supported by contributions by the employee, is to my mind the most successful for all protection for old age. We favor this, even to extending a certain amount of help to this fund out of our general fund, but to be effective and for the worker to retain his independence it must be largely supported by small contributions from him.

"Never Seen a Man, Willing to Work Who was Unable to Make a Living

Mr. W. S. Elliott, President of The Elliott Company, Pittsburgh, writes as follows:

As a general thing, I am firmly opposed to any paternalistic policy on the part of government or industry.

I spent three months in Europe this winter, and saw enough of the dole system and subsidies in England to satisfy anyone that any form of paternalism practiced by a Government leads to pauperism in one form or another. Over a million people in England are drawing doles, which is enough to enable them to carry out an existence, and when a number of members of a family worked they lived about as well with the dole as if the more energetic members of the family worked. You are familiar with the effect of the subsidy that England granted the mining interests, more in the way of paternalistic measures than any other country. The government taxes its people to buy houses, and then rents the houses to the inefficient, lazy and incompetent citizens, and gets a return of 1 per cent on the money which the taxpayers furnish.

One of the most serious drawbacks to the state providing pension would be that politics would largely control the management? Vote would be sold for pension right and left.

In conclusion, I wish to point out that where there is a chance to get something for nothing, with or without merit, the more people there are to grasp the opportunity, and it is not at all improbable that if the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania provided old age insurance, or insurance of any kind, the burden would become so tremendous that no one could predict the extent to which the producers of wealth would be called upon to support the inefficient, lazy and indolent part of our population.

This is only another case of misapplying idealism. The world has gone along for a great many centuries and poverty has always been an outstanding problem in every community in every part of the world, and always will be, even if all the idealistic schemes that have been proposed to alleviate it were applied. It has been my observation that the more we do for the indolent and unfortunate, the more we are called upon to do. When it comes to the sick or helpless, we have hospitals and institutions supported by the state to take care of these people, and I believe that it is pretty well done, in spite of political influence in some cases. Let every tub stand on its own bottom. I have never yet seen a man who was willing to work, regardless of his age, unless he was completely incapacitated, who was not able to make a living for himself.

Contends Earnings Cover Needs, Savings and a Balance

Mr. J. E. Durham, Vice-president of The Bonney Forge & Tool Works, Allentown writes as follows:

We do not favor establishing an old age pension as the Workmen's Compensation and Mother's Pensions are now constituted, for the reason that from a standpoint of political economy the earnings of a person are inherently designed to cover present needs, a proportion of savings and a balance for those things which do not immediately stand in the light of necessities. It is impossible by a Bureau fund or Governmental supervision to establish any fund which will take the place of individual prudence and forethought. There are at present institutions from which can be secured insurance against future needs and these insurance companies are so flexibly organized that policies may be written in a wide variety of ways to provide against the needs of old age.

We believe that individual savings and individual foresight produces a people who are stronger, thriftier, and less apt to become a charge upon the public than a benevolent and supervisory fund which becomes a haven of refuge to any who distinctly do not deserve it.

Says Pensions Will Defeat Ends Sought by Corporations

Mr. Hervey Sternbergh, Manager of The American Dye & Tool Company, Reading, writes as follows:

We do not agree that the American People owe anything to the man who grows old without providing for his old age. When provision is made for him it is out of charity and not because of any obligation to them. We believe that pensions discourage attempts at self-support, and tend to increase rather than solve the "problem".

There are almshouses and other homes for orphans and aged men and women and there are also other means by which individuals may readily provide for their old age, if they wish.

Why should industry alone be compelled to attempt to pension its employes? Let those who wish it, try it.

Is it not partly as a means to their own ends that individuals, large corporations undertake pension systems, and would not those ends be defeated if pensioning became universal?

If pensions must be made easier to obtain, why not encourage individuals to seek them by a rebate in taxes, because the government would thereby be relieved of the possibility of having to support them. If it is the non-taxpayer who is to be benefited at the expense of the taxpayer this would defeat the purpose, but then too, it would deserve to be defeated.

Sees Ruin in Pensions

Henry T. Schmidt, President of The Schmidt and Ault Paper Company, York, sees national ruin in an old age pension law. Mr. Schmidt writes:

Regardless of what free thinking Mr. Babson or our theoretical Governor may think or say on the subject, we can only feel that The Establishment of Old Age Pensions would put this State in the same Category as England, with their Employment Doles, which are mere hand outs; and so are opposed to them.

Competition is the spice of life, without it we are bound to become a bunch of sluggards and sink like the Old Roman Empire. To be able to live along and know that when we arrive at a certain age, we are going to receive a certain compensation, eliminates one desirable feature from life's struggle.

At heart we are all inclined to be neurasthenic; let any one of us be told by six different people that we are not looking well in the morning, we are in bed in the afternoon, taking care of an imaginary illness. Let any man reach the age of sixty or sixty-four and know that he is going to be pensioned, and watch how the imaginary ailments, aches, pains, etc. increase. The increases in other pension funds certainly bear this out.

Would Make Us Spend Thrifts

Mr. R. A. Young of the U. S. Young & Company, Allentown, thinks old age pensions are a wonderful plan in theory but in practice would make us into a nation of spendthrifts. Mr. Young says:

We feel that the plan you suggest is a wonderful thing in theory, but question whether it would work out in practice. We have always felt that a pension of any type, whether military or industrial, has been a tremendous drain on the treasury, and it is a question as to just what reserve could be set up to cope with it. Furthermore, we feel that if a plan of this sort went into effect it would produce a Nation of Spendthrifts, as there would be no future to look forward to. We have always felt that one of the most stable practices this country has enjoyed has been that of saving, and we feel that it would be entirely defeated by this movement.

V Miscellaneous Comments as to a State Program of Relief for the Aged

Following is a group of opinions from business and industrial firms which though embodying one or another of the main principles discussed previously, contain sufficiently modified suggestions as to make it impossible to classify these under definite headings.

Private Pension System Proving Too Heavy a Burden

On behalf of Mr. Frank Disston, President of Henry Disston & Sons, Inc., of Philadelphia, Mr. George Satterthwaite writes expressing gratification that the Old Age Pension Commission undertook a special study of industrial pensions. Mr. Satterthwaite says that the Disston Corporation is finding that its present pension plan is becoming more costly than the concern had expected and a new plan is now under consideration. He writes in part as follows:

This matter is of very active and important interest to our company at the present time, and at the last meeting of the Board a Committee was appointed to investigate thoroughly and submit a recommendation for a pension system which if possible, might be an improvement over our present system.

It is our present thought that the system under which we are now operating is causing too heavy a cost burden on our business, and it is hoped that a modification may be found which will accomplish the two important essentials of a proper pension system, namely:

A—Fair consideration to employees who have given loyal and faithful service to a company for a great many years.

B—The accomplishment of this ideal at the smallest possible financial burden.

"Target for Politicians"

Frederick W. Moore, Treasurer and General Manager of The E. Keeler Company, Williamsport, raises objections to old age pension legislation but also proposes a direct tax for pension purposes if such a measure is introduced. Mr. Moore fears old age pensions might become a "target for politicians."

The plan of this correspondent to levy a direct tax on every voter in the State to cover the cost of an old age pension law is one which a number of business men have suggested. Mr. Moore writes:

From an economic standpoint, the principle (old age pensions) will have a tendency to discourage thrift and takes away every incentive to save from the class that saves with reluctance. We all know the political aspects of any pension scheme. It is the old story of the politician fortifying himself at the taxpayers and if old age pensions were inaugurated at $1.00 a day, within ten years the politicians would be taxing the state to pay $2.00 or $3.00 a day, and the average citizen would think that he was a ward of the State after reaching a certain age and, while no doubt this would produce a restful state of mind, it would also paralyze any savings instinct to make provision for declining years.

If the desirability of "Old Age Pensions" is not a debatable question and you are simply treating this as an accomplished fact and are asking opinions as to how the burden is to be distributed, our opinion is that it should be paid by a direct tax levied on every voter in the State. We believe this is the only way to prevent an abuse of the plan. The greatest danger, if the plan is once to be adopted, is in increasing the limits as has been done in the war pensions, with the idea on the part of politicians in catering to votes every time the increase is made. If the entire citizenship is subject to an increase in this tax, the politican would have nothing to gain and would be very careful as to how he antagonized the entire electorate. On the other hand, if the tax is very largely paid by corporations, it will only provide a target that the average politician delights to shoot at.

Voluntary Pension Plans Failures

Mr. Henry F. Pope, President of the National Malleable and Steel Castings Company, which has plants in Pennsylvania, writes from the Cleveland office of this Corporation. Mr. Pope says the directors of the company have come to the conculsion that all the voluntary industrial pension plans they know of are failures and that no satisfactory plan has yet been worked out. ....."We are opposed to any Pension Plan," writes Mr. Pope, "whether adopted by the State or by the industry itself, until one is worked out which will meet all of the present difficulties."

Cost of Company Pensions "Appalling"

Mr. Edward G. Budd, head of the Edward G. Budd Manufacturing Company writes from the Philadelphia offices of this concern of a recent investigation made by that concern to determine the cost of providing a pension plan for the company's employees. The amount estimated to be required for this purpose was "appalling" says Mr. Budd. He continues:

We have recently studied the subject carefully and have gotten the cost of handling the pension in our own works. To give an employee a pension regardless of his financial position would cost quite an appalling sum of money and as this cost becomes greater many years hence when the management may be in the hands of others than ourselves, I have not felt justified in advocating it.

This fact, Mr. Budd points out would "indicate the necessity of national or state action." He goes on to argue, however, against pensions paid for out of public funds on the grounds, apparently, that he believes the majority of the employees in his company are well able to provide for their own old age and do not need or desire pensions.

VI Employers Favoring Modified Insurance Schemes to Meet Need for Pensions

Glad Commission is not Indulging in "Hobby Riding"

Mr. F. W. Johnson, President of the Quaker City Cab Company, Philadelphia, sends a most interesting and informative communication to the Commission in whch he dscusses the whole problem of old age pensions in industry out of a long and varied experience at first hand in various transit corporations. Mr. Johnson favors a system of voluntary old age pension insurance to which the employee and employer would contribute jointly. The insurance company handling these pension funds should be regulated by the State and the moneys placed in depositories designated by the State, Mr. Johnson advises. On the question as to whether the State should contribute to such a pension fund Mr. Johnson reserves his opinion until an actuarial study shall have been made of the probable costs. Extracts from Mr. Johnson's letter follow:

I am impressed by the evident intention of your Commission to avoid going off half-cocked on this thing or to indulge in an orgy of hobby riding. This cannot but make for confidence in a problem that is loaded with dynamite.

It has not been by experience to observe in 25 years handling of labor that the certainty of a pension makes for greater effort or efficiency in the average run of the mill.

Most men give little thought to pension matters until they reach middle life, then, when their years of greatest productivity have passed, they become tremendously interested in pensions. It is here that the element of fear really enters.

But with younger men there is no such fear, and hence there can be no lessening of efficiency from this cause. In men past middle life I have observed a tendency toward greater effort, plainly induced by fear of their future status.

In talking with men nearing their pension age I have found a surprisingly large percent of time-servers. Particulary true will you find this among municipal employees. In industry the reverse hould true, I think, because of the higher wages now being paid, higher than most pension prospects ever before received in their working lives. While I have no statisticts at hand, I think perhaps this distinction may be due to the fact that the pension rate of government employees corresponds more favorably with their salary rate than holds true in industry where the reverse obtains.

In the electric railroad business I have observed that most men prefer to continue at work as long as may be physically possible, in preference to going on pension. But here again the pension is so relatively low as to make the wage rate more attractive.

All this is not intended to discount the appaling situation which confronts men and women in late life who have made no provision for support when they have passed their years of greatest usefulness. Undeniably this is a real problem and your commission is engaged in a very worthy cause if it can help toward its solution.

I had some part in establishing the pension system now in effect in the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company, and from actuarial studies afterwards made I am not entirely certain that this plan will not become burdensome in later years because of the high percentage of long service men employed in that fine company.

Just as Mr. Babson seems to feel that adequate old age pensions will solve most of our industrial, social and civic problems. so I have encountered industrialists who similarly felt that an insurance policy would safeguard them against labor troubles. Neither of these pean out under test conditions.

I do feel, however, that protection of this sort necessarily makes for better working conditions and so stabilizes labor, which of itself alone is of inestimable advantage to both employer and employee. By this I mean that the average worker is less disposed to hop from job to job if in each such hop he sacrifices certain positive benefits for himself and family.

Favors Giving Every Pensioner "His Own Stake in the Game"

I do not favor a non-contributory pension plan. I most certainly favor a system wherein employers and employees contribute jointly. Whether the State also should participate is something on which I am of open mind. By all means give every pensioner his own stake in the game. Any pension system which smacks of charity or pauperism is foreign to our institutions. No one attaches value to that which comes without effort or sacrifice. The contrimutory plan makes for self-respect, thrift, and industry. It is a savings bank account.

I would not favor a compulsory plan. Perhaps this is an eventuality of the future. First let us know more of the actual costs of pension insurance. To guard against bankruptcy of the employer, voluntary dissolution, change of management or policy, consolidation or causes beyond the control of the employer, the contributory pension plan funds jointly supplied by employer and employee should be placed in depositories designated by the State, for the protection of pensioners and pension contributors.

Urges Employee-Employer Sustained Fund

Mr. William C. Burton, Treasurer of The Surpass Leather Company, of Philadelphia, writes on behalf of that corporation to advocate a compulsory contributory pension system operated by approved private insurance companies and not the State. The directors of this corporation would have all contributions to the pension fund paid by the employees and employers. In effect, this concern would favor pension legislation which would operate in practice though not in the contributions very much as the Workmen's Compensation Act does at the present time.

Proposes Pensions and Insurance System

Mr. E. G. Haines, Assistant Secretary and Treasurer of The Cannonsburg Steel and Iron Works, of Cannonsburg, urges that all persons over the age of 70 years who are now dependent on others for their support should receive a State pension of two dollars per week, the cost of which shall be borne by taxation. Mr. Haines believes that the problem of the aged should be met in the future through the establishment by the State of a system of voluntary insurance against dependency in old age. Mr. Haines' proposals are as follows:

An old age pension should be voluntary. Any person desirous of making provisions for old age should be required to enter his or her name in a register at a local Post Office, make weekly or monthly payments, obtaining and keeping a receipt for same. Payments should be considered as insurance so that if the person dies before benefiting, the payments are retained in the Fund for use in maintaining same.

The Pension to be in proportion to the number of years the recipient has been contributing—10 cents per week to be the minimum payment and 25 cents the maximum; pension $3 a week to $7.50; to start at 65 years of age.

In order to relieve the situation at present, give $2 per week to all men and women over 70 years of age who can show they are dependent upon others for support. (The money to come from taxation). Others over 65, to become beneficiary when attaining 70 years of age, they registering themselves at once for same benefit.

All below 65 and not younger than 55 to pay 10 cents per week, receiving at 65 the minimum of $3 per week.

All below 55, can pay 10, 15, 20 or 25 cents according to their own decision, receiving benefits of $1.50 per week for each 5 cents weekly payments.

Favor Private Insurance Plans

The Supplee-Wills-Jones Milk Corporation, of Philadelphia, writes that a contributory old age pension plan seems worthy of consideration. After outlining some of the efforts being made by the Corporation to interest its 2,500 employees in plans to promote thrift and to purchase life insurance policies the suggestion is made that the pension problem could probably "be better taken care of by the Insurance Companies."

Compulsory Provisions Without State Action

Mr. Stanton B. Peck, Vice President of The Link-Belt Company writes from the Philadelphia office of this corporation. After stating that in his opinion "hardly enough is yet known about the subject (old age pension) to warrant suggesting definite and permanent plans," Mr. Peck goes on to declare that his company is "favorably inclined towards the ultimate provision for the care of the aged employees." Three conclusions on the subject have, however, been definitely arrived at by this corporation and these Mr. Peck outlines as follows:

1. We do not favor handling the matter through governmental or state legislation and control, or through a state fund.
2. We believe the beneficiaries should be contributors during their working period.
3. We believe that any fund established should be beyond the power of the employing concern to divert to any other purpose.

Believes State Should Compel Employers to Establish Retirement Funds

Mr. F. D. Williams, President of The National Transit Company of Oil City, advocates that legislation be enacted making it compulsory for employers of labor to contribute to a fund which will provide pension or annuities for aged employees. Mr. Williams gives an outline of what he believes should be the principal features of this plan. In discussing what he believes to be the objections to a contributory pension scheme in which the employees pay their share, Mr. Williams says that this method would give the workers a good opening to demand wage-increases. The Commission has encountered this objection to a contributory pension plan from other employers.

Mr. Williams recognizes the need for the maintenance of the aged. The salient features in Mr. Williams' communication are as follows:

We believe there should be a State law enacted, provided such a law is constitutional, making it compulsory for corporation or other employers of labor who have made no provisions for retirement and proper annuity for aged employees to create a fund to provide for an annuity or pension, either on the basis of a fixed sum per month in accordance with his earning ability or upon the continous service, with say twenty years as a minimum, in either case. The amount of annuity or pension to be paid to the employee based on the average yearly earnings covering a period of from five to ten years prior to date of time limit. . . . We do not think this should be organized and controlled by the state such as compensation is handled, for the reason that we feel it will give an opportunity for future trouble and monopolistic control, and thus prove detrimental and a hardship to the employer of labor.

Further, we do not approve of making it a contributory system so that the expense will be distributed between the state, employer and employee. First, if the state is a party to the fund, then there is danger of creating a state department to handle the fund, and demanding full supervision over the same, thus adding a heavy unnecessary overhead expense. Second, if the employee is a party to the same, we feel the purpose for which the law would be intended will not have the same effect or bear the same results it should if the employee were required to contribute a certain amount each month, quarter, or whatever period is required, and there would present an opportunity for him to make certain demands for increases in his wages, and thus prove a detriment to employer and employee in being called upon from time to time to settle and adjust differences.

This annuity or pension, we believe, should be taken care of by the employer entirely in recognition if the long and faithful continuous service of the employee and his interest in giving his best for the benefit of his employer.

Prefers Voluntary Insurance

Mr. H. H. Fry, Secretary of The Narrow Fabric Company, Wyomissing, would be in favor of a voluntary system of old age pension insurance with the State, employer and employee contributing. Mr. Fry indicates, however, that his concern might be willing to agree to a compulsory insurance plan along these lines.

Urges Industrial Pensions Under Proper Supervision

Mr. B. Frank Day, Manager Employees Relations of the Philadelphia Electric Company, Philadelphia, writes in part as follows:

We would not contend that the industrial pension systems are entirely adequate or scientific, as at present administered, but believe that experience will point out better methods of financing, and of guaranteeing stability, notwithstanding some failures that have been recorded. The maximum average experience will be met in due time and some increase in the percentage of pensions to total number of employees would logically follow the age of the organization until the average is reached. Whether or not industries are following a business-like method of financing their retirement plans, is of course, a matter to which intelligent consideration must be given. We do not advocate an industrial plan based on compulsory retirement at any given age. It is evident that in any plan followed, whether an industrial or a State plan, the "accrued liability" would be approximately the same, and the cost would probably be less if privately administered.

We do not believe that a State administered "Old Age Pension Plan" covering compulsory retirement at definite attained age would be popular or advisable in Pennsylvania or in the United States, nor do we believe it would conduce to the self-respect of the citizenship. Too many opportunities for "leaning" are not desirable and the proper development of thrift, the safeguarding (by the State) of the results of thrift, and the insistence by the law, on the assumption by relatives of filial obligations to assist those dependent, would leave a burden so light that methods of providing for those who are actually entitled to be State charges might readily be found by the State.

A standardized plan for all industries may be developed as to include the accrued liability of each industry and should be so financed by the industry under a proper supervision, making optional the purchase of annuities or the establishment of such protection within the industrial organization, dependent on its financial stability.

Low Cost Insurance Should Be Made Available

Mr. P. B. Heintz, President and General Manager of the National Casket Company, Boston, writes as follows:

Non-compulsory, low-cost old age insurance should be made available. Part of the cost of such insurance should be borne by the State, and its cost covered by a tax on all incomes. A further tax should be levied to maintain homes for aged that have not provided for themselves, though the above insurance and those carrying the suggested insurance, should be exempt from the latter tax.

The operation of the suggested plan would involve serious difficulties, and the taxes are not at all in harmony with the ideas of politicians. They would, however, in my opinion, furnish a needed means by which the large majority of our independent people could protect their old age and also take care of the indigent minority.

I have stated my views in compliance with your specific request, realizing fully that the Old Age Pension Commission is best able to determine a satisfactory plan.

Urges Private Insurance Plans and "Junking" Almshouses

Mr. George G. Sharp, Manager of the Marion Machine, Foundry and Supply Company, insists that the individual must protect himself against indigence in old age through the purchase of an annuity from an insurance company. Mr. Sharp goes on to say that the almshouse should be "junked". Mr. Sharp writes:

1. It is our opinion that the tendency has been, and still is, to overload our government with functions not pertaining to it. Insurance or pensions of this type are not properly a governmental function.

2. It is primarily the function of the individual to make provision of proper sort for this problem of old age dependency. This may be done by the purchase from companies engaged in that sort of business, of proper insurance against such dependency.

3. We are absolutely opposed to any additional form of taxation, the proceeds of which would be used for such a pension plan, and especially so where exclusive classification would prevail. If it is true that three persons would be supported on a pension of maximum of $1 per day in their own homes, on the money that is now spent on every dependent aged in our almshouses, then the almshouse plan should be junked. This has been our opinion for many years, in that our present method is absolutely wrong and that better service could be given for less money by eliminating the almshouse itself.

Urges Handling Pensions by Insurance Companies

Mr. A. F. Schoenhut, President of the A. Schoenhut Company of Philadelphia is in favor of a Compulsory Contributory Pension Fund operated through a specially created Mutual Insurance Company. Mr. Schoenhut urges that such legislation be national in scope. He drafts what his corporation would consider the best practical method of applying such a scheme. The cost of the law should be borne by the employer and employee, each paying an equal share, Mr. Schoenhut advocates.

Like many other business men, Mr. Schoenhut says the administration of an old age pension law "should be kept out of politics." He believes that the management of the fund through a state supervised mutual insurance company would prevent the danger he foresees of the "creation of a lot of fat jobs for office holders."

Prefers Private Pensions

Mr. C. C. Conway, First Vice President of the Continental Can Company, writes on behalf of the management of that corporation, in favor of private industrial pension plans of contributory character. Mr. Conway's letter is as follows:

Expressing the view of our management here we should say:

(A) That in our opinion it is better for the state to keep out of the old age pension entirely.

(B) An old age pension is fundamentally an insurance problem except in the case of very large corporations.

(C) The contributory system, where the company pays a part, say 25 per cent or more, and the employees pay 75 per cent or less, in the purchase of annuities is a sound and economic plan in protection of the companies as well as of the employees.

(D) Any such plan should provide that in case the company ceased doing business, or elected to discontinue the plan, the employee could, by continuing his payments, purchase his annuity and not be deprived of the benefits of the company participation up to the time the company's contributions ceased.

Cement Corporation Head also Says Employer Should Pay Full Cost

Mr. Morris Kind, President of the Hercules Cement Corporation of Philadelphia, after indorsing a State pension system on a contributory basis, adds:

My preference would be for a plan compulsory for all employers but operated by them and not by the State. The employer only to furnish the funds but both employer and employees to join in the operation.

Urges State Cooperation in Voluntary System

Mr. John C. Haddock, President of the Haddock Mining Company with head quarters at Wilkes-Barre, is one of those corporation heads who offer as their principal objection to a State system of old age pension that maladministration would be bound to develop through what is alleged to be the inevitable tendency of "politicians" to control such an undertaking. Mr. Haddock, however, believes that some State bureau should cooperate with employers to promote the voluntary adoption of protection against indigence in old age among the wage-earners. Mr. Haddock writes:

Personally, I am not in favor of State or governmental old age pensions. By reason of the method of administration, it is unavoidable with even the most semi-political bureau, lost motion, delay and expense of administration result.

I am in favor, however, of cooperation by some State bureau with the employers of the Commonwealth in an attempt to foster the theory of future provision among the working classes.

Urge State Action to Compel Employers to Provide Pensions

Mr. C. S. Mitchell, Vice President of the Philadelphia Company of Pittsburgh, believes that while voluntary action of industries would be preferable, "state action would be needed to bring about a general condition." "Pensions," Mr. Mitchell believes, "should be paid by the industries in which life of employee has been spent. The employee could perhaps contribute to additional allowance to himself in excess of an established range." Mr. Mitchell adds that "a good plan modeled along the lines of present workmen's compensation law could probably be worked out."

Mr. A. W. Robertson, Vice President and General Attorney of the same company, also takes the position that industry should bear the cost of this insurance and that no funds should be expended for this purpose out of general taxation. Mr. Robertson writes in part:

In addition to the information contained in the questionnaire, I have the following suggestions to make:

That any plan should contain provisions for the individual to make payments which would increase his old age allowance.

That any plan should start with the present and no attempt be made to make it retroactive for the reason that the burden on certain industries would be too great for them to attempt to take care of all the old men in their organizations. This would not mean that the old men reaching the age of retirement would necessarily be thrown out into the street. They would be taken care of, at least, as well as, or better than they are at the present time.

That all insurance plans carry some kind of assurance to the individual that his pension is safe and certain. In order to accomplish this it would seem to me that some form of life insurance annuity would have to be used.

Pensions Not to Exceed $100 a Month

Apparently there is a tendency to under-estimate all pension requirements and this tendency should be given consideration. In order to make a plan acceptable to business and also economically sound the amount of the pension should be relatively small. In my opinion in no case should it be more than $100 a month, and in many cases much less. Such a sum would be ample to take care of the usual old person, and if a person was vigorous enough to have wants which could not be supplied by the pension, no doubt he would have enough earning ability to supplement his pension.

VII Employers Preferring a Pension Law Modeled After the Workmen's Compensation Act

Advocates Pensions to be Carried by Insurance Companies Like Compensation

Mr. Henry Oliver, President of the Oliver Iron and Steel Corporation, Pittsburgh, writes as follows:

Based on my limited knowledge of the subject, my guess would be that old age pensions should be handled along the lines of the Workmen's Compensation Law, and carried by reputable and established insurance companies.

Another Pittsburgher Endorses the same Principle

Mr. H. F. Wahr, President of the Mesta Machine Company, Pittsburgh, states:

In our opinion, this problem could best be solved by State action under systems of insurance or pensions modeled along the lines of the present State Workmen's Compensation Law.

Is Personally in Favor of Modeling Pension Law After Compensation Act

Mr. Roy C. McKenna, President of the Vanadium-Alloys Steel Company, Latrobe, writes to the Commission as follows:

The writer has not consulted with the Board of Directors of this company on the subject, but personally would much prefer an old age pension modeled upon the lines of the present State Workmen's Compensation Law.

Hearty Endorsement of Compensation Law Model

Mr. Theodore Arter, Jr., General Manager of the Times Tribune Company, Altoona, states:

We heartily favor a plan modeled along the lines of the Workmen's Compensation Law. We believe that the system would fail entirely if it were not compulsory.

VIII Employers Favorable to Pensions in General but Leaving Plans to be Worked Out by Commission

The following group of correspondents is typical of those who are in agreement with the principle that legislative action should be taken to relieve dependency in old age, but are also of the general opinion that a State Commission can be dependent upon to work out the most satisfactory plan for all interests concerned. Many executives have written to say they were too busy to make what they consider to be an adequate response to the questionnaire but were satisfied the Commission would suggest measures equitable to all concerned.

Will be Glad to Cooperate

The letter received from Mr. Louis J. Laroche, Vice President and Secretary of Dick Brothers, Inc Reading, is typical of several received by the Commission in answer to the questionnaire. Mr. Laroche, writing in behalf of the President and Secretary of Dick Brothers, Inc., Reading, is to give the pension proper consideration, but makes it clear this his company "will be glad to cooperate with any reasonable plan" finally worked out to alleviate the lot of the dependent aged.

"Old Age Pensions Very Necessary"

Mr. J. N. Newhart, General Manager of the Liggett Spring and Axle Company, Monongahela, writes briefly:

We wish to state that an old age pension fund is very necessary, and we hope the Commission can arrange for a satisfactory method of handling this proposition.

"Will take Individual Action if Law is not Passed"

Mr. M. E. Leeds of the Leeds and Northrup Company, Philadelphia, states in his reply to the Commission that his company, although a comparatively new concern, anticipates having to undertake an old age pension system of its own unless the State takes action in this matter. A number of other corporations make similar statements in their correspondence with the Commission. Mr. Leeds writes:

Our company is a comparatively young one and its personnel is also for the most part young. We realize, however, that this is an important subject and have had a committee studying it for some little time. Though the committee has yet made little progress. If the State does not act, we shall probably arrange to have some sort of pension fund of our own within the next few years.

"Great Forward Step"

Mr. James M. Smith, President of the Shenango Pottery Company of New Castle, writes to the Old Age Pension Commission:

I think it would be a great forward step if the State of Pennsylvania could work out some equitable plan along the line on which you are now working.

"Will be in Accord With Commission's Plan"

Mr. C. S. Philips, Head of the Philips-Jones Corporation, writes from the New-York office of the corporation as follows:

The Philip-Jones Corporation will be in perfect accord with whatever plan is evolved as I feel certain that those who have given this matter their time and attention will work out something that will truly cover the old age requirements.

Chapter III

The Possibilities of a Compulsory Contributory Pension System in Pennsylvania

Difficulties Encountered

The legislative resolution creating this Commission requests that, in addition to the securing of all available facts as to the actual working out of the pension plans in this country and abroad, the Commission also make report on the "advisability and practicability of a contributory system as against the straight pension idea". Inasmuch as up to the present time no studies of this nature have as yet been made for any state in the Union, the Commission could, of course, not be guided by anything already done in this country. While such actuarial studies and estimates had been made in many foreign countries, the bases taken in these countries were found to be thoroughly impracticable for any constructive program in Pennsylvania. Europeans look at the entire problem with altogether different eyes and do not hesitate to embark on a prolonged and costly program of care of the aged. As an instance, the Report of the Government Actuary in Great Britain, upon which estimates the recently inaugurated English contributory pension plan was adopted could not be used, to any extent, because the English plan from the outset binds the Government to a system of State contributions which will not fully mature for a period of more than eighty (80) years.

Insufficient Data

Our problem was further complicated by the insufficiency of the available statistical data for the wage-working population of Pennsylvania upon which actuarial estimates could be based. Thus, while the United States Census Bureau was able to supply us with the actual number of persons by single ages for the entire population of the State in the year 1920, it was able to give us the ages of the wage-earners only by groups ranging as follows:

Wage-Earners in Pennsylvania by Age Groups in 1920

Age groups	Male	Per cent of total population of that age	Female	Per cent of total population of that age
10-13	3,508	1.0	1,338	0.4
14	9,019	11.3	6,443	8.1
15	20,926	29.2	14,437	19.6
16	49,307	60.4	31,144	38.9
17	54,491	74.2	34,982	47.2
20-24	331,737	93.0	150,027	40.2

The distribution of these wage-earners by age groups instead of by single ages—especially in view of their groupings into 20 year periods after age 24—makes it practically impossible to secure the exact number of wage-earners now living at each age in Pennsylvania, which from an actuarial standpoint are of supreme importance. Because of these deficiencies and handicaps and in view of the fact that correspondence with the Census Bureau disclosed that no more detailed figures are now obtainable, the estimated number of wage-earners in Pennsylvania by single ages was ascertained by applying the percentage of gainfully employed as given for the different age groups after 18 by the 1920 United States Census to the total population by single ages as supplied by the Census Bureau.

Distribution By Occupation

The 3,426,359 persons over 10 years of age given by the 1920 United States Census as engaged that year in gainful occupations in Pennsylvania were distributed by industries as follows:

Agriculture, Forestry and Animal Husbandry	284,313
Extraction of Minerals	332,432
Manufacturing and Mechanical Industries	1,426,705
Transportation	284,540
Trade	339,037
Public Service	53,697
Professional Service	165,106
Domestic and Personal Service	257,145
Clerical Occupations	283,384

Questions Submitted to Commission's Actuary

Having thus ascertained the approximate number of wage-earners by single ages, and their distribution by industries, the Commission submitted to Miles M. Dawson, of New York, one of the world's foremost actuaries, who has dealt with the subject scientifically not only from the viewpoint of private employers and insurance and fraternal organizations but also from the viewpoint of society as a whole, the following basic questions:

1. Could an insurance system be established by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania whereby persons making regular contributions could accumulate sufficient funds as to enable them to retire upon a specified annuity after a certain number of years?
2. What would be the actual cost per person in case the Pennsylvania Legislature should decide to enact an old age insurance plan which would make it obligatory for all wage-earners—male and female—in Pennsylvania to contribute to a pension fund which would permit the insured to retire at age 65 at an annuity of $365 a year, or $1 per day?
3. What would be the cost if the pension amount at the same age of retirement should be set at the rate $480 a year, or $40 a month, to all males and females?
4. What can be done under such a system with an insured who has, say, paid contributions for 10 years or more and then becomes separated from pursuing a gainful occupation within the State by leaving the State or otherwise except through death or permanent disability.
5. What may be done for the persons who at the time of the inauguration of such a law had already passed the specified age of retirement or have only a few years to go before reaching that age?
6. How shall the insurance be carried?

To assist the actuary in the calculations, the Commission suggested that for practical purposes, contributions under any contemplated plan would have to begin not earlier than age 18 and end at the attainment of age 65 when the pension would begin. At 18 was selected because it is the age when the great majority of wage-earners are fully entering industry and become mature workmen. Most child labor restrictions are lifted at this age. Age 65 was taken as the suggested age of retirement because (1), all studies of the aged have shown that it is the maximum period when most wage-earners may expect to stay in their regular employment; (2) because it is the year generally recognized everywhere, whether in national or industrial pension systems, as the proper retirement age; and (3), because the Commission felt that if the worker is to contribute to the fund it would be neither practicable nor just to postpone the retirement age to 70, which was the age set by the non-contributory Old Age Assistance Act of 1923 and in most non-contributory governmental pension plans.

Costs of Pensions as Calculated by Actuary

In answer to the Commission's questions, the actuary, after taking into consideration the probable rates of mortality of the various Pennsylvania groups of wage-earners, which he decided would be identical with that prevailing for the entire population of the same ages in the State; the increase in the population of wage-earners in the State since 1920, which he estimates to have amounted to 3,576,359 in 1925, and assuming 4 per cent as the rate of interest to be used, submits the following table of annual contributions as necessary to be paid by each male person at the different ages in order to build up the different annuities.

Cost Per Week

In other words, the actuary's computations indicate that in order to build up on strict insurance and actuarial principles, a fund which would pay a pension of $7.00 a week beginning with age 65 and, which would continue for the life of the annuitant, a male employee would have to pay a level premium of 28c per week if he begins to contribute to the fund at age 18; 31c per week if his contributions begin at age 20; 54c per week at age 30; $2.38 per week at age 50, etc. For a pension of $40.00 a month, the weekly rates would be 37c at age 18; 41c when begun at age 20; 72c at age 30; $3.13 at age 50, and the like. Somewhat higher weekly premiums would have to be paid by women because of their higher expectancy of life

Contributions not Burdensome for Younger Persons

The above actuarial calculations show that under present conditions it should not prove a serious difficulty for the great majority of wage-earners below the ages of 25, or even thirty to contribute the full cost of a pension amounting to $365 a year or even $480 a year. These workers, through their own contributions, and without any assistance from the outside whatsoever, could create a self-sustaining fund to provide them with fully paid-up pensions. It is obvious, however, that wage-earners who had already passed the age of 30, when such a system came into operation could not be expected to be able to provide alone sufficient contributions to make up a fully paid up annuity for them at age 65. It is generally after the age of 30, when most wage-earners are burdened with families and other necessities; and a married man with a family to support, even at the prevailing high average wage, could hardly be expected to be able, out of his own means, to buy a fully paid-up pension of $365 a year at age 65 when the necessary monthly contributions at age 30 amount to $2.37. In the case of women workers, whose rate of wages are generally lower while the premiums are higher, this would be especially difficult. It is plain, therefore, that these persons could not be expected to carry the burden alone. Furthermore, the principle of having every wage-worker pay the exact premium of the age of his entry upon the inauguration of the fund, while it may sound plausible from some points of view, would be highly impracticable not only because of the enormous amount of additional accounting and bookkeeping this would entail, but would actually result in placing the heaviest burdens upon those least able to bear it. Those past the ages of 45 and 50 would, under this system, have to pay the highest premiums, whereas the income of the majority of wage-earners at these periods of life is beginning to diminish. On the other hand the younger workers, with less responsibilities and perhaps the highest wages, would feel the burden least. Furthermore, contributions based upon the exact ages and strict insurance and actuarial principles are not only not embodied in any of the existing foreign pension systmes but such provisions would actually fail to take advantage of the main principles of social insurance—the widest and fairest distribution of risks.

Similar Difficulties Encounted by Industrial Corporations

The problem just stated is now new. It is faced by every industrial concern whenever it wishes to inaugurate a scientific and actuarially sound pension system of its own. It is a comparatively easy problem, it finds, to establish a safe fund for annuities to mature at age 65, or 70, for young employees. But it is another matter when it is informed by the actuary that it would have to set aside several hundred dollars at once, or in the near future, for each employee now 50 years of age and over who has been with the concern a considerable length of time in order to provide him with an actuarially sound annuity upon retirement. It is the problem of the "accrued liabilities" which is most difficult to solve. And the same "accrued liabilities" apply to a state or nation as well as to an industrial corporation.

How the Problem may be Solved

A solution to the problem may in the main be sought in two ways; (1) All persons above a certain age may be entirely ignored by the system, making the plan to concern itself only with the younger workers and leaving the older persons as they are without any further provision. (2) The State and employers could come jointly to the assistance of these elderly persons and thus help make up the deficit in the case of those who are unable to carry the premium load either in part or in full themselves.

Dependent Aged cannot be Ignored for Long

The only arguments which may be urged in behalf of the first method—of ignoring persons above a certain age—is that while it may be extremely harsh, those past a certain age simply must be let go as there is no easy way of providing for them. They will, it may be contended, at least be as well off as they are today; at the same time, it may be pointed out, the system does provide ample protection for those under a certain age who after a period of years will have secured pensions out of their own contributions, thus the problem will, at least, be solved for the future. As a practical method however, this is hardly feasible. The problem of aged dependency in this State, we are convinced from our many years' researches, is too pressing today to be further delayed. There are immediate needs which must be met at once. It is hardly fitting for us under our present prosperous conditions to say we must ignore the needs of the aged poor for at least about 30 years, but in return we will provide for those now still young and virile. It is significant that abroad no country which has adopted a contributory pension plan followed this method.

Suggested Plan for Pennsylvania

The second program—i.e. the State and employers coming to the assistance of those who are already above a certain age and who cannot from their own resources make sufficient contributions,—is the one followed practically in every country which had established a scientific plan of old age insurance. Mr. Dawson, our actuary, makes an interesting suggestion for a plan along these lines for Pennsylvania. His recommendations are simply that all persons, regardless of their ages at the time of joining the insurance system, should pay an equal premium. The same premium for all the insured, except where it is graded in accordance with the wages earned, is followed by practically all nations which have adopted contributory systems of insurance. The annual premium at the age 32, which in the case of an annuity of $365 a year beginning at age 65 amounts to $32.11 for men and in the case of an annuity of $480 a year amounts at the same age to $41.23—in each case approximating twice the rates for the same deferred annuity if contributions began at age 20—should be taken, Mr. Dawson suggests, as the rate for all. This rate should be divided equally between the employer and the employee which would make each party pay the rate of a deferred annuity at age 20 and which would not prove burdensome to either.

The State's Contribution

Under such a plan, it would mean that all those who at the date of the inauguration of the plan are 32 years of age and younger, would through their own and their employers' contributions—amounting in each case to about 35c a week in the case of a male employee for a pension of $365 a year and to 45c a week in the case of a pension of $480 a year, while in the case of a woman employee the contributions at the same age would be respectively 40 cents and 52 cents—create sufficient funds for their annuities at age 65 without any outside aid. In the case of persons who at the time of the adoption of the law have already reached 33 years and over, and who could not be expected to contribute themselves the full amounts of their premiums, the deficits should be made up from some other source, preferably by the State. In such a case the heaviest burden of the State would occur the first year of the adoption of the plan when those who would be retired under this law would have made no contributions whatsoever. In the second year's operation of the system, the State's burden would be diminished by one year's contribution of the participants; the third year's deficit made up by the State would be diminished by two years' contributions of the insured, and so on, until those who will be retired 32 years after the system had been in operation would have made full contributions for their annuities except for missing one year's premium. The State's share would thus be heaviest at the beginning and would gradually diminish until all those who had joined the plan when they were 33 years of age had retired and passed the period of their life expectancy which at age 65 is about 12 years. In such case the total period of years during which the State would have to bear a steadily reduced burden would approximate 45 years.

State Need Not Assume Full Coverage

It is evident from the above and from the actuarial calculations as found by Mr. Dawson that if the State should promise to provide, regardless of any qualification such as have for instance been specified in the Old Age Assistance Act of 1923, from the very beginning of the adoption of the insurance system for all those entering it between the ages of 18 and 64 with the same pensions as would be available under the insurance system if begun at the age 32 or younger, the State's burden during the first years would be too enormous, and under present conditions could not be considered as at all feasible for the State of Pennsylvania. We should not even think of suggesting that the State undertake such a load at this time. But such action is altogether unnecessary. Thousands of persons listed by the United States Census as wage-earners are highly paid executives, heads of businesses and professional persons and even highly skilled workers who are not at all in need of such provisions. While the principle of insurance contributions to provide for old age may, in view of our modern hazards, be applicable and even advisable for all, regardless of the economic status at earlier ages, it is ludicrous to assume that all wage-earners in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania upon reaching age 65 will be in need of assistance, or should be given such. What is paramount is the allevation of the dire wants of those who are really in need and who cannot under any conditions pay the full premiums at the high ages. A system, therefore, that would combine the principle of full contributions for those of the younger ages to be made by the insured and their employers in order to provide for the future, together with some form of state assistance for those in the immediate need and whose contributions would not alone produce a sufficient annuity, would seem the most practical and logical way of solution. It is significant that practically every country abroad endeavored to solve its immediate problem of old age dependency along thees lines.

Possibilities of this Plan

Following this line of thought, a system such as contemplated by the actuary could thus be inaugurated, for instance, in the year 1930. This would mean that after the year 1963 all of those who have joined the fund when it was adopted or thereafter, will have, through the contributions of themselves and their employers, raised sufficient funds to provide them with annuities at age 65 as not to need any further State assistance. To take care of those who by 1930 had already passed age 65, as well as to help out some of those who because of their high ages at the time of the inauguration of the law could not raise sufficient annuities through the contributions of themselves and their employers, a system of state assistance such as was provided by the 1923 act, embodying definite qualifications and limitations, so that only those really in need of such assistance would be entitled to receive same, could be worked out. Such a plan would meet the problem of those who are really in immediate need of such relief, would supplement the contributions of those who could not raise these in sufficient amounts, would not prove burdensome to the Commonwealth, would provide a just and humane method of care of the aged and at the same time would establish a self-sustained system of old age annuities contributed entirely by the insured themselves and in the end all future burdens of the Commonwealth would be eliminated.

The Paid-up Values

Regarding the paid-up values of the annuities in the case of employees who have contributed for a considerable length of time and then by leaving the State or otherwise, become separated from pursuing a gainful occupation within the State by some means other than by death or permanent and total disability, our actuary, Mr. Dawson, recommends that in such cases after 10 years' continuous service on the part of the employee, during which period he has contributed continuously to an old age deferred annuity, that a surrender value be granted, such surrender value to be a paid-up deferred annuity beginning at age 65, in such an amount as will be purchasable by the amount of the employee's contribution pro rated by the percentage of his annual contributions to the annual contributions he would have been required to make had he paid the full amount necessary at his age of entry to buy such annuity.

The Insurance Carrier

Regarding the carrying of this insurance, the actuary says: I consider it would be essential for a State fund to carry the insurance. If you permit the insurance companies or private employers to act in the matter, either of them would certainly count on a lower rate of mortality and go after business where that is the case, and I believe that the result of this would be that your own mortality would be increased very materially. I am of the opinion that you would have, in that case, the burden of providing rates on different mortality tables, such as coal miners, steel mills, etc. I advise that you do not welcome a field like that.

Administrative Problems Complex

The actuary's calculations and suggestions are thus certainly illuminating and invaluable. At least they provide us with a basis of estimating the probable cost of a contributory pension plan which, has been disclosed in the preceeding chapter, is very much desired by many of our industrial and business leaders of the State. The possibilities and limitations of this plan are plainly shown. The cost of such a system, it appears, can be fairly determined upon and from an actuarial and insurance viewpoint, the inauguration of such system of deferred annuities presents no serious difficulties.

The administrative side of such a plan, however, is not so simple. It is loaded with a great many more difficulties than is the actuarial phase. The constant mobility of Pennsylvania wage-workers from this State to other states, the shifting of workers from one job to another as well as their constant movement from one city to another, not to speak of the great mass of women workers who do not stay at work or in business for sufficient length of time as to enable them to build up adequate annuities, or the women who work as house-wives in the home present innumerable administrative barriers which are not easy to overcome.

Contributions Collected by Employers Burdensome

From our many years of general studies of the question both in this country and abroad, we feel warranted in concluding that as far as we can see at the present time the method generally followed in European countries of making the employer responsible for the full weekly payments of the premium for both himself and his employees, but allowing him to deduct the workers' share from the latter's wages, could hardly be feasible in this State with the lack of permanency characteristic of the personnel of most of our corporations, the intermittent and seasonal work of many industries and the distribution of plants of the same corporation over a number of different states. The expense of collecting these contributions from the scattered small employers of labor, especially from employers engaged in agriculture and in sparsely settled communities would seem to us, for the present, almost insurmountable obstacles, and would preclude an effective system, even as has been the case in some of the European countries.

Principle of Contributions May be Applied Through A Poll Tax

Nevertheless, we are convinced that the principle of direct contributions for old age pensions, should in some way be embodied in the future State program of old age annuities. Such provisions, we feel, would meet with the hearty approval of practically all our varied interests and citizenship. What is necessary, it seems to us, is but the working out of a method which, while embodying the principle of contributions on the part of those who are to benefit of this fund, would at the same time not involve a too-top-heavy system of administration and expense. Off-hand, it does occur to us that the best line to be followed might be some system of a monthly or quarterly poll-tax-equal to the actuarial value of a specific and not to burdensome age—levied on every wage-worker engaged in gainful occupation in Pennsylvania. This could be paid by the employer who would be allowed to deduct a part, or half of that tax from the wages of his employee. The working out of such plan might be very profitably studied further, for if carefully framed such a plan might be able to meet the needs of a sound system of self-sustained annuities in the future as well as to provide an immediate and inexpensive system of pensions to those in the need of such relief at the present time.

Chapter IV

The Old Age Pension Movement in the United States

The movement for the inauguration of a definite and constructive social policy in regard to the superannuated workers in the United States is of comparatively recent origin. Aside from military and civil pensions, government insurance or pensions for all needy aged citizens were entirely unknown, until recently, in this country. Indeed, while in England legislative committees were seeking a solution of the problem of old age as early as the beginning of the Nineteenth Century, and on the European continent adequate provision for the aged was a dominating issue throughout the latter half of the last century, the movement in the United States, until a few years ago, had been entirely dormant.

Our laggardness in human provisions for the decrepit aged is not surprising in view of the newness of our country, our ample supply of free land and the comparatively recent development of our industries. As long as our population was centralized largely in rural districts and as long as we remained a dominantly agricultural nation there was no serious problem of old age dependency. For the more or less flotsam jetsam of society, the poor law provisions were considered sufficient. But with the expansion of our industries, the migration from rural into urban centers and the disappearance of free land, dependency in old age could no longer always be credited to individual maladjustment or lack of good and thrifty habits on the part of the dependent persons. On the contrary, in most instances old age dependency is a result of social and economic conditions over which the individual had absolutely no control. For this new and increasingly larger class of dependent aged, the poor law, as originated by Queen Elizabeth in 1601, and which, in the main, is still followed in most of our states, could, of course, no longer suffice. To meet these new conditions more constructive policies began to be advocated in the United States, even as they have been urged, many years before, in countries without our exceptional economic opportunities. Because of the changed conditions and the realization of the inadequacy of our present provisions for the aged poor, considerable agitation for some system of old age pensions to provide for the worthy aged who have become dependent through circumstances not of their own making developed in the United States. While, as yet, little actual progress has been made, the subject of old age dependency and pensions has received considerable attention in the United States during the last two decades. Legislation to improve the conditions of the aged have been urged not only upon almost all the states in the Union, but for many years, bills seeking to establish an old pension system have been introduced into the National Congress.

Old Age Pension Bills in the Congress of the United States

The Wilson Bill

The first bill for the pensioning of the aged as a whole introduced into the United States Congress was presented by Representative William B. Wilson of Pennsylvania (ex-Secretary of Labor), in 1909. This bill provided for the establishment of a national old age pension system of $120 per year for all persons over 65 years of age whose property possessions did not amount to over $1,500, or whose income did not exceed $240 a year. This bill was drawn up under a subterfuge of organizing an "old age home guard of the United States," in which, the bill proposed, men and women of that age could enlist in order to receive a pension. Nothing, of course, came out of this bill.

The First Berger Bill

In 1911, Congressman Victor L. Berger of Wisconsin—the first Socialist Representative—introduced a bill providing a pension of $4.00 a week or less to all persons 60 years of age and over who did not possess an income of over $10 a week. The bill required 16 years of citizenship, good and moral character and provided for the pension to increase or decrease every twelve months in accordance with a sliding schedule. This bill attracted great attention and brought the problem of old age pensions before the public at that time as never before.

The Kelly Bill

Another bill was introduced by Congressman M. Clyde Kelly of Pennsylvania on June 10, 1913. Mr. Kelly's bill proposed to pension all persons who have attained 65 years of age, who have been citizens for 20 years, and whose income during the 12 months next preceding the application did not average nine dollars per week. The bill excluded from the receipt of pensions, persons who habitually refused to work, paupers and criminals. The amount of the pension was graded according to the claimant's income, ranging from four dollars per week, if the income was less than six dollars, to one dollar if the income did not exceed nine dollars per week. The administration was to be in charge of the Secretary of the Interior.

Senator McNary's Bill

Since then several other bills providing for old age pensions have been presented in the United States Congress. One of these was presented in 1917 by that staunch champion of the aged, the late Representative Isaac Sherwood of Ohio. Before the 66th Congress there was a bill providing for old age pensions, patterned after Mr. Kelly's bill introduced by Senator Charles L. McNary of Oregon. This bill aimed to pension all persons who have attained the age of 65 years, who have been citizens for 20 years, and whose income from any source for the twelve months next preceding the application did not average six dollars per week. Pensions were not to be given to persons who had habitually failed to work according to their ability, or who were being maintained as paupers or inmates of correctional institutions. The bill proposed that every person who fulfilled the required conditions, should be placed upon the pension roll and be entitled to receive a pension, which was to be provided by an annual appropriation from Congress. The pension was to be graded according to the following schedule: "four dollars a week when the average weekly income of the pensioner, as calculated under the act, does not exceed six dollars; three dollars when the income exceeds six dollars but does not exceed seven dollars; two dollars when the income exceeds seven dollars, but does not exceed eight dollars, and one dollar when the average income exceeds eight dollars, but does not exceed nine dollars". The bill further provided that the pension may be increased or decreased every twelve months, whenever the pensioner's income increased or decreased, according to the terms of the schedule. When both husband and wife are pensioners and living together the pension of each was to be three-fourths of the regular rate. The administration of this act was to be in charge of the Secretary of the Interior.

Second Berger Bill

On March 16, 1926, Representative Victor Berger introduced another bill in the Federal Congress. This bill provides for a non-contributory pension to all persons 60 years of age and over whose income is not over $8.00 per week. The amount of the pension is graded as follows: "when the average weekly means of the pensioner from all sources as calculated under the Act do not exceed $8.00 per week, he or she shall receive a pension of $8.00 per week; when the average weekly means of the pensioner from all sources do exceed $8.00 but do not exceed $10.00 per week, he or she shall receive a pension of $6.00 per week; when the average weekly means of the pensioner from all sources do exceed $10.00 but do not exceed $12.00 per week, he or she shall receive a pension of $4.00 per week." The bill also contains a clause specifically forbidding the courts to pass upon its validity. None of these bills have been reported out of the committees.

The Movement in the Various States

Although the Federal Congress, except for the passage in the Spring of 1920 of the Sterling-Lehlback Retirement Act for federal employees, has done little in the movement for the establishment of a general old age pension system, much more progress has been made by the various states since the subject became a public issue in this country. Not only have bills in the last five years been introduced in approximately forty of the state legislatures, but many states have created commissions to study and report upon the subject of old age dependency and pensions. Since 1914, the Legislatures of eight states—Arizona, Montana, Nevada, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, California, Washington, Kentucky—and the Territory of Alaska have actually passed Old Age Pension Bills of one kind or another. In about a dozen other states these bills have passed at least one house of the legislature. At the present time only the states of Montana, Nevada, Wisconsin, Kentucky and the Territory of Alaska have old age pension laws on their statute books. The California and Washington bills were vetoed by their respective governors, while in Arizona and Pennsylvania the laws were declared unconstitutional not on the merits of the laws themselves but in the former State because of the ambiguity and loose wording of the bill and in the latter because of certain constitutional limitations. A brief analysis of the various state laws in their chronological order of adoption are presented herewith.

State Laws on Old Age Pensions

Arizona

The first attempt to establish a non-contributory pension system in the United States was made in the State of Arizona in 1914. By means of the initiative petition and a popular vote of 25,827 in favor and 12,394 against, legislation was enacted in that year providing for old age and mothers' pensions grants. The Act read as follows:[1]

[1]Arizona Acts, 1915, Initiative Measures, p. 10.

Section 1—All almshouses within the State shall be abolished, their grounds and buildings shall be sold for the best obtainable price, and the proceeds shall be devoted for the purpose hereafter set forth in this Act.

Section 2—In the absence of almshouses, and in order to care for aged people and people incapable of earning a livelihood by reason of physical infirmities, and widows or wives whose husbands are in penal institutions or insane asylums, they being mothers of children who are under the age of sixteen (16) years, a system of pensioning is hereby established.

(a) The Arizona State Board of Control shall have entire charge of all funds provided for the purpose mentioned, and shall order the same paid by the State Treasurer to persons entitled, upon warrants issued by the boards of supervisors of the various counties in the State of Arizona. These boards shall also act as examining boards on the fitness and eligibility of applicants for pensions.

Section 3—The State shall pay to each man and woman sixty years of age and upward the sum of fifteen ($15) dollars per months as long as such pensioners shall continue to live within this State; provided, always that said recipients shall be citizens of the United States and residents of Arizona for five years last preceding application; to be entitled to this pension they must also be without visible means of support.

Section 4—All widows who are mothers of dependent children also wives whose husbands have been consigned to penal institutions or insane asylums and who have children under the age of sixteen years looking to them for support shall each be entitled to fifteen dollars per month, and an additional six ($6) dollars per month for each child in their keeping under the age above mentioned, irrespective of the mother's age, provided they are citizens of the United States and residents of Arizona five years last preceding application.

Section 5—There is hereby appropriated out of the general fund of the State treasury a sufficient amount each year to carry out and put into effect the provisions of this act.

Section 6—All acts or parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Law Declared Unconstitutional

That such a loosely drawn and vague Act should encounter constitutional difficulties was not surprising. In declaring the Act void, the Supreme Court of Arizona pointed out:

(1) That the act did not definitely define the word "almshouse" and that the language of the act was so broad as to imply the abolition of both private and State benevolent institutions which would be unconstitutional inasmuch as an article of the Arizona constitution provides for the establishment and support by the State of reformatory and penal institutions as well as for the benefit of the insane, blind, deaf and mute, etc. (2) The court further declared that if it were assumed that the Act contemplated only the abolition of county hospitals and county poor farms, the money obtained from these sources could not be used for State purposes but would have to revert back to the individual counties. (3) The court also pointed out that under the provisions of this act no disbursements of the general funds could be made until it can be shown that all almshouses of the State had been abolished. Such proof, the court held, were not shown at the time of the hearing. (4) The Act was held to be unconstitutional also because the body of the Act was inconsistent with its title. (5) The court further objected to the law because mothers with dependent children were pensioned regardless of their financial condition. The court's decision in declaring the law void was thus entirely independent of the merits of the old age pension plan itself.

Alaska

In 1915, the legislature of the Territory of Alaska passed an Act providing for the payment of pensions to aged persons. As originally provided under this law:

Any pioneer of Alaska, regardless of sex, who has attained the age of sixty-five years and shall have resided in Alaska for ten consecutive years or more since the year 1905, and is entitled to the benefits of the Pioneers' Home at Sitka, Alaska, or of the home for Indigent Pioneers' Home at Fairbanks or elsewhere in Alaska, (should the same be established) may, in lieu of an application to be received and cared for at such home, make an application to the Board of Trustees of said Alaska Pioneers' Home, for an allowance to be paid out of the revenue of said Home; and thereupon said Board shall investigate the case of such applicant, and if they find that his or her case is worthy, and that he or she is in actual need of such allowance, the said trustees shall enroll him or her as a beneficiary of said Home * * * and in conformity therewith, an allowance shall be paid for his or her use * * * Provided that if any person pensioned under the provisions of this act, shall be admitted to the Alaska Pioneers' Home or other Territorial Institutions, any pension granted hereunder shall be suspended during the time such person shall be an inmate of any such Territorial Institution, nor shall any pension be paid to any person who has been absent from the Territory of Alaska for a period not to exceed one year.

The original bill provided for allowances not to exceed $12.50 per month in any case. In subsequent legislatures the allowances were raised to $12.50 per month for men and $25.00 per month for women as the Board of Trustees in their discretion shall allow "having regard to the necessities of the applicant." An amendment of 1923 further increased the allowances to $25.00 per month per man and $45.00 per month per women at the determination of the trustees of the Alaskan Pioneers' Home. Each allowance is paid quarterly. The residence requirements were changed to 15 years by the 1919 amendment.

In case of lack of revenue and when allowance installments are not paid, the amended Act stipulates that "it shall remain an obligation of the Territory of Alaska to the beneficiary, the arrears of which shall be paid as soon as funds shall be available". In the absence of Congressional authorization no Federal funds are to be used for this purpose. Grants may be revoked if the Trustees are satisfied that the pensioner is capable of self support or his relatives able to support him. It is also provided that the applicant for assistance "in consideration of the receipt of the benefit of this Act, agrees that all property of which he or she is possessed or seized, shall, after his or her death, vest in and become the property of the Territory of Alaska." The Alaskan Governor is quoted as commenting on their law as follows:

The Alaskan system is administered with simplicity and at the very minimum of cost. It is more economical to pension a deserving pioneer than to keep him in the Home.

Montana

The State of Montana adopted an old age pension law on March 5, 1923. Unlike most other pension systems, the Montana law leaves both the administration and the financing of the fund entirely in the hands of the county authorities. No central supervision is provided. The pensions are determined and paid by the old age pension commissions of the counties which are the boards of county commissioners. All moneys come from the county poor funds. Pensions are granted to persons 70 years of age whose income is not over $300 a year. Applicants must have been citizens of the United States for 15 years and residents of Montana for the same period immediately preceding the date of application. Persons who have resided in Montana a total of 25 years, at least five of which immediately preceded the date of application, qualify as to residence requirements. The amount of the pension is fixed by the old age pension commissions i. e. the Boards of County Commissioners, "with due regard to the conditions in each case," but the maximum amount of the pension is limited to $25.00 per month. The law also provides for the reimbursement to the county poor fund of all the payments made to a pensioner together with 3 per cent interest from the estate left by a deceased pensioner.

In the summer of 1924, the Massachusetts Commission on Pension sent questionnaires to the various counties in Montana, and replies received showed that 31 counties were then paying pensions. Twenty-one counties were not paying pensions, and 3 counties did not reply. According to the answers received, 378 persons were in receipt of old age pensions in the summer of 1924, at a total cost of approximately $6,500 a month. Eighty-six of the pensioners, or 22 per cent received the maximum of $25 a month. No almshouses were closed through the application of this law; several counties had none to close. There were in all 324 inmates in these institutions on January 1, 1923, according to the United States Census Bureau Report. Some 25 inmates left the almshouses as a result of the operation of this law, according to the information received. In answer to a question whether the maximum pension of $25 a month was sufficient to maintain an aged person, 24 replies were received, 12 in the affirmative and 12 in the negative.[2]

The Montana Old Age Pension System in 1926

A questionnaire sent by this Commission in the Fall of 1926 to the County Commissioners in Montana who also act as old age pension commissioners brought responses from 51 of the 56 counties in that State. Of those replying, 37 counties reported paying pensions while 14 stated that they have not yet accepted the provisions of the law. The latter have either had no applications for old age pensions, have no funds from which to pay the pensions, as is the case in the largest county in which the City of Butte is located, or prefer to continue the older form of poor relief. Thirty-nine counties whose total population, according to the U. S. Census, amounted in 1920 to 372,163, out of the total State population of 548,889, report that since the inauguration of the law in the middle of 1923 and up to the Fall of 1926,—a period of more than three years—a total of 1,042 persons, or 2.7 per 1,000 population, made application for pensions to them. Three additional counties with a total population of 15,351 state that not a single application for pensions was filed with them. Thus, during the three years since the Montana law has become operative, but 2.6 persons per 1,000 population made application for an old age pension. In view of the increase in population during the last six years it is obvious that the number of applicants in these Montana counties did not amount to even two and one-half per thousand population.

2.2 Pensioners Per 1,000 Population Granted

Of the counties reporting the granting of allowances after the applications had been examined, 34 counties with a total population of 319,401 granted altogether, during the three years since the pension law has been on the statute books, a total of 177 pensions, or 2.2 pensioners per 1,000 population.

1.4 Pensioners Per 1,000 Population Now Receiving Pensions

Towards the end of 1926, 32 counties whose total population amounted to 307,784 in 1920, stated that they were paying pensions to 448 persons which makes for these counties, after the third year since the inauguration of the law, an average of 1.4 pensioners per 1,000 population on the basis of the 1920 population, and considerably less on the basis of the population in 1926.

Average Pension First Year $12.54 per Month

Thirty of the counties, reporting on this point, state that from the inception of the old age pension law in the middle of 1923 up to the Fall of 1926, they had spent a total of $215,820.13 which makes an approximate annual expenditure of $71,940.00 for the 30 counties reporting. In view of the incompleteness of these data and the fact that the law was functioning for only about half of the year 1923, it is perhaps best to consider on this point the reports of the old age pension commissioners of the several counties to the Montana State Auditor as broadcast by the Associated Industries of Montana—an organization which has steadily been attacking the Montana Law. Accordingly, these reports show that at the end of 1923, approximately six months after the law went into effect, a total of 542 applications were made in 34 of the 56 counties of the State and 343 pensions were granted in 29 counties 20 of which were cancelled the same year. Twenty-eight of these counties had spent up to the end of that year a total of $22,872. The year 1924 was the first full year of the operation of the Montana law. According to the same source of information during the year a total of 323 new applicants were filed with 39 county boards. Because a number of applications granted during this year were actually filed the year before, the total granted during the year 1924 equaled the total number applying during the same year while 89 pensions were for one reason or another, cancelled during the same year, leaving on Dec. 31, 1924, a total of 521 pensioners drawing allowances from 36 counties. Thirty-seven counties during that year spent a total of $79,429. Assuming that the average number of pensioners during that year was 521, it would mean that the average pension during the first full year of the operation of the Montana Law amounted to $150.37 per year, or $12.54 per month.

No More Than Two Pensioners Per 1,000 Population in Montana

During the year which ended Dec. 31, 1925, 252 new persons made application to 37 county boards; 175 pensions were granted, while 113 were cancelled during the same year, leaving a net increase of 62 pensioners during the second full year of the operation of the law as against a net increase of 234 pensioners, or almost four times as many, during the first full year of the operation of the law. These figures are significant inasmuch as they seem to indicate that most of the aged who felt entitled to a pension under the Montana law have by 1925 already made their applications and have been granted allowances and that after the first year of the operation of the law the increase represents only the natural annual crop of persons who reach age 70. Such a gradual increase must be expected to continue for a period equal to the life-expectancy of this group, which in the case of those 70 years of age and over is a little over 9 years. The above conclusions seem to be warranted further by the fact that the statements submitted by the 39 Montana county boards to our Commission indicate that during the year 1926 there was but an inconsiderable number of additional applications and the number granted allowances during the third full year of operation of the law was not extensive. It is not likely that at the end of 1926 the total number of pensioners in Montana will exceed 600 persons. In this case, even if it is assumed that the population covered by the pension paying counties represents but 300,000,—although in fact the actual population covered is really nearer 400,000—the average number of pensioners will, at the end of three and a half years operation of the law, not exceed 2 per 1,000 of the total population.

Pension Cost Amounts to only a little More than two cents per Month

According to the further statements of the Associated Industries of Montana, during the year 1925, 38 Montana counties, with a total population in 1920 of 343,278 in only 34 of these, (1), spent during that year a total of $88,225 on the average of 559 pensioners. This means an average of $157.82 per year, or $3.03 per week on each pension. Each citizen in these Montana counties thus spent on the entire pension system the extravagant sum of 27 cents a year or a little over 2 cents a month.[2]

[1] Four of the counties listed were created since 1920, and no census figures on population are available for these.

[2] The actual experiences of the Montana Old Age Pension law are exceedingly significant to Pennsylvanians interested in securing an estimate of the possible cost of an old age pension law. In its 1925 report the Pennsylvania Old Age Assistance Commission stated that on the basis of its statistics, "the total probable ratio of applicants under the 1923 Old Age Assistance Act would not exceed 3.3 per thousand." On this basis it estimated a total of 24,230 pensioners for the State at an annual net cost of approximately $5,000,000, or 57 cents per capita. In view of the actual results disclosed by the operation of the Montana law, the Pennsylvania Commission figures were, to say the least quite liberal.

The baselessness of the figures taken by opponents of old age pensions are clearly brought out by the actual experience of the Montana system during the last three and one-half years. In 1921-22, the Industrial Accident Board of Montana upon the request of the State Legislature stated that if it is assumed that 50 per cent of the aged 70 years of age and over should qualify for old age assistance—the assumption generally taken by opponents of this legislation, although nowhere have actual data been presented for such computations—the total number of pensioners in Montana would be 4,258, and at the rate of $300 a year would cost the State of Montana a total of $1,277,400 a year. The wide margin between this "guess" and the actual experience in at least one state in the Union, should prove exceedingly valuable to all those sincerely interested in obtaining a factual basis for the estimate of pension costs.

Cost of Almshouse Inmate—$65.98 Per Month, Cost of Pension—$13.14 Monthly

In view of this "wasteful" pension system it is interesting to note in this connection that the above referred to report of the Montana Associated Industries states that the same 38 Montana counties had spent during the fiscal year of 1925 a total of $312,075 on the "poorfarms, contract and outside poor". A per capita division of this total on the 324 inmates found in the Mountain almshouses on January 1, 1923 by the U. S. Census Bureau would, of course, not be fair, inasmuch as the total sum expended covers also outdoor-relief, and the number of these is not given, nor are the expenses properly divided between indoor and outdoor relief. That most of these expenditures however, were spent on the almshouse inmates is evident from the following:

The official report of the United States Department of Labor entitled "The Cost of American Almshouses" published in 1925 shows that for each of the 270 inmates in the 22 Montana almshouses studied by the Department, there is a value of property investment amounting to $1,921.21. The total annual overhead expenses alone in these institutions amount to $140,109 per year. The Annual Maintenance Cost Per Inmate For All The Institutions Studied Was Found To Amount To $518.91, Or Approximately Three And One-Half Times The Amounts It Cost To Support A Pensioner In His Own Home During The Same Year. The Report Further Shows That In 12 Of The 22 Montana Institutions The Actual Maintenance Cost Per Inmate Amounted To $791.80 A Year, Or $65.98 Cost Per Person As Against A Pension Of $13.14 During The Same Year, Or More Than Five Times As Much.

All Aged Prefer Pensions to Almshouses

All the Montana County Commissioners which have written the Commission state that, practically without exception, the Montana aged prefer to accept the meager pensions rather than go to the poor farm.

Nevada

On the same day and at the same hour when the Governor of Montana approved the old age pension bill adopted by the Montana legislature, the Governor of Nevada signed the old age pension bill passed during that session by the Nevada legislature. The law provided for the establishment of a State Old Age Pension Commission which was to be made up of the Governor, Lieutenant Governor and the Attorney General of the State. It also provided for the appointment by the Governor of independent county old age pension boards of three residents to pass upon applications and to make recommendations to the Commission which would make the final decision.

The pensionable age was set at 60, and pensions were to be given to all persons who have been citizens of the United States for at least 15 years and residents of Nevada for at least 10 years immediately preceding the application. Persons who had a total residence of 40 years in the State, at least five of which immediately preceded the date of application, qualified as to residence requirements. The only property qualifications specified were the possession of property valued at over $3,000 which disqualified an applicant from a pension grant. The amount of the allowance was to be determined by the Commission with due regard to the conditions in each case but the allowance, together with the pensioner's all other income, could not exceed a total of $1.00 per day. To raise the necessary fund, the law established a special tax of 2½ mills on each $100 taxable property within the respective counties. These taxes were to be turned over to the State Treasurer for the old age pension fund. Inasmuch as the special tax levy provided insufficient revenue for full payments, and the higher officials of the state "feared the political result of paying pensions to some when there might not be enough for all applicants", no pensions were paid under this act.

The Lieutenant Governor who was made Commissioner of Pensions under that law pointed out in his Report to the 1925 Legislature that there were 55 applicants for pensions under the Nevada law and that 37 of these would probably be eligible to pensions under that law. He estimated that under the 1923 law the entire expense to the State would not exceed $30,000 per year over that spent on outdoor relief. He made strong recommendations for an increased fund, pointed out the great need of this law in Nevada and gave the following reasons as to why the old pension system should be put in full operation in that State:

Because it is cheaper and in every way more satisfactory than the ordinary poorhouse system.

Because fear of old age and pauperism tends to despondency and often insanity and suicide.

Because old age pensioning makes for righteous living and better social and economic conditions.

Because it is abnormal for industry to throw back upon the community the human wreckage due to its wear and tear, sickness, accident, and to involuntary unemployment.

Because pensioning keeps intact the home which is the foundation on which our country is reared.

Because many prefer to starve rather than go to the poor-house.

Because pauperism causes unregeneration of children.

Because a pension is the fulfillment of an acknowledged obligation, a deferred payment for services rendered.

Because a working man who has contributed health and strength, vigor and skill, to the creation of the wealth by which taxation is borne, has made his contribution already to the fund which is to give him a pension.

Because a State that makes it a crime to turn out an old horse to starve, should be ashamed to let old men and old women starve or go to the poorhouse—which is more feared than starving.

Because it prevents children from being undernourished and set to work early in life in order that they may help support the passing generation.

Because the assistance of a small pension added to wages from part time employment would allow men and women to remain producers instead of non-producers as poor-house inmates.

Old Law Repealed and New One Enacted

In spite of this report, the Legislature of Nevada early in its 1925 session repealed the Act. In March of that year another old age pension bill was passed. This bill follows the Montana law in placing the entire system in the hands of the local county commissioners, but unlike the mandatory provisions of the latter, the Nevada Act more or less leaves the establishment of old age pensions up to the decision of the county commissioners as to whether they wish to adopt the provision of the law or not. All central supervision is eliminated, except that the county boards are required to make a report on the outstanding facts annually to the Governor of the State. The main provisions of the 1923 act were retained except that the age limit was raised from 60 to 65 years. At the 1925 annual meeting of the county commissioners it was decided not to acept the provisions of the act. As far as could be ascertained from letters addressed to all the 16 County Boards in Nevada, up to the present, only one of the fifteen Counties replying reports of having pensioned one aged person.

Pennsylvania

(The Pennsylvania Law is discussed in Chapter I of this Report)

Wisconsin

Establishment of the "Life Fund"

In 1911, the legislature of Wisconsin authorized the issuing of policies of life insurance and annuity contracts by the State. This was done by establishing a "Life Fund" which was "to be administered by the State without liability on the part of the State beyond the amount of the fund, for the purpose of granting life insurance and annuities, to persons who at the time of the granting of such insurance and annuities are within the State or residents thereof". Life insurance and annuities or several kinds were to be sold to any one between the ages of 20 and 50.

When the Wisconsin Life Fund was established its promoters declared that "it is the stepping stone to annuities to protect old age and perhaps to solve other economic and industrial problems." Although fairly successful in its first few years, the "Life Fund" in Wisconsin soon became a political pawn. When an antagonistic State administration came in, the Fund was let to peacefully slumber and as a result it became practically unknown in the State. Very few persons, it is reported, are today maintaining insurance policies with this Fund.

Inauguration of Old Age Pensions

On May 12, 1925, the Governor of Wisconsin signed an old age pension bill which was adopted during the year's session by the Wisconsin Legislature. The law authorized each county by two-thirds vote of the members elected to its County Board to establish a system of old age pensions. After having operated under such system for one year or more the law permits any county to abandon the plan.

The Wisconsin law provides for the granting of an old age pension to an applicant 70 years of age or upwards who has been a citizen of the United States for 15 years and who has resided continuously in the State for 15 years immediately preceding the date of application. Pensions may also be granted to persons who have resided in the State for 40 years at least five of which have immediately preceded the application.

As is the case in most of the other American pension laws, the Wisconsin Act also provides that the exact amount of the pension is to be fixed with due regard to the conditions in each case but in no case shall it be an amount which when added to the income of the applicant exceeds a total of $1.00 a day. The applicant's property or the combined properties of husband and wife living together must not exceed $3,000.

How The Law Is Administered

Applications are filed with the county judge of the county in which the applicant resides. The county judge is authorized to make or cause to be made an investigation and to decide upon the application and fix the amount of the pension. No appeals from the decision of the county judge can be taken. The State Board of Control is given the power "to promulgate rules and regulations to efficiently carry out the provisions of the Act."

How Funds Are Raised

The pensions are paid by the county. The law also provides that "each city, town and village shall reimburse the county for all amounts of money paid in old age pensions to its residents less the amounts received by the county from the State for that purpose." On the first of January of each year the county treasurer certifies to the Secretary of State and the State Board of Control the amount paid out by such county during the preceding year for old age pensions. If the Board of Control approves the same, the Secretary of State credits one-third of the amounts so certified to be due such county on the State taxes next due from it. The State Treasurer then credits such county with one-third of such amount in his annual settlement with that county for taxes due the State. To carry out the provisions of this law, the legislature made an annual appropriation of $200,000 for the payment of pensions and $5,000 a year for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act.

Data on the Wisconsin Old Age Pension Act

The actual workings of the Wisconsin old age pension law is summarized in a recent report of the State Board of Control. According to this report, up to the Fall of 1926, five counties, namely Brown,[3] Wood, Outagamie, LaCrosse and Sawyer accepted the plan. With the exception of Brown and Wood counties, the other three counties did not accept the plan prior to 1926. By June 1, 1926, 261 pensions were granted in these five counties. Three of these pensions were increased, 8 were revoked while 37 were refused originally. Three other applications were still pending on the same day. The average pension granted ranged from 61.2 cents per day in Outagamie county to 89.3 cents per day in Brown county. Up to June 1, the five counties expended a total of $23,131.16.

Sex of Pensioners

Of the total of 261 receiving pensions 161, or 61.7 per cent, are males and 100, or 38.3 per cent, are females.

[3] The Brown County Board of Supervisors on Nov. 15th 1926 repealed the Old Age Pension ordinance. Marshfield County is reported to have recently come under the provisions of the law.

Marital Status

Of the 161 males 77, or 44 per cent, are married, 69, or 42.8 per cent, are widowers; 17, or 10.5 per cent, are single, 3, or 2.7 per cent, are divorced.

Of the 100 females, 19 are married, 72, are widows, 5, are single, and 4, are divorced. Pensions were granted to both husband and wife in 9 instances.

Ages

Of the 161 males receiving pensions, 70, or 43.3 per cent, are between 70-74 years of age; 58, or 36 per cent, between the ages of 75 to 79; 22, or 13.7 per cent, between the ages of 80 to 84; 8, or 4.9 per cent, between the ages 85 to 89; 2, or 1.2 per cent, between the ages 90 to 94, and 1, or .9 per cent, between ages 95 to 99.

Of the 100 females receiving pensions 41, are of the age 70 to 74; 32, between ages 75 to 79; 17 between the ages 80 to 84; 6, between the ages 85 to 89; 4, between the ages 90 to 94.

Place of Birth

Of the total 261 pensioners 77, or 29.4 per cent, were native born in Wisconsin; 93, or 35.6 per cent, were born in other states, and 91 or 35 per cent, were of foreign birth.

Of the 91 foreign born 41, or 45 per cent, were born in Germany; 12, or 13.1 per cent, born in Norway; 11, or 12 per cent, were born in Canada; 5, or 5.4 per cent born in Austria; 5, or 5.4 per cent, born in Belgium; 4, or 4.3 per cent, born in Denmark; 4, or 4.3 per cent, born in Holland; 4, or 4.3 per cent born in Ireland; 1, or 1.04 per cent, born in France; similar percentages held for those born in Scotland, Poland, Bohemia and Czechoslovakia.

Physical Incapacity

Of the total 261 pensioners 205, or 78.5 per cent, are disabled, leaving 56, or 21.5 per cent, that are not disabled.

Occupations

Of the total 261 pensioners, 213, or 82 per cent, have no present occupation; 47, or 18 per cent, have occupations. Old age and disability have forced many pensioners to give up their former occupation, some seeking lighter work, but more of them forced into retirement.

Of the 46 who had been formerly engaged in agriculture, lumber and fishing, only 10 were continuing their former occupations when they had reached 70 years of age. Ninety-four were formerly employed in the Manufacturing and Mechanical industries. Only 16 were able to continue upon reaching 70 years of age. The transportation industry which formerly employed 8, now employs 1. Nine were formerly in public service and at the present 2 are still employed. One-hundred were formerly employed in domestic and personal service and now 17 are able to continue.

Wages Earned

Two hundred forty-two pensioners, or 92,7 per cent, reported no weekly earnings; 19 pensioners, or 7.3 per cent, reported $120.57 weekly or an average of $6.34 per person per week.

With Whom Residing

Eighty-four, or 32.1 per cent, are living with their children; 57, or 21.8 per cent, are living alone; 55, or 21 per cent, are living with their wives; 31, or 11.8 per cent, are living with friends; 18, or 6.8 per cent, are living with relatives; 12, or 4.5 per cent, are living with their husbands; 3, or 1.1 per cent, are living at a hotel; and 1, or .9 per cent, is living at a hospital.

Other Sources of Income

One hundred and thirty-seven, or 52.4 per cent, have no other source of income; 32, or 12.2 per cent, have small savings accounts; 26, or 9.0 per cent, report incomes from their children; 23, or 8.8 per cent, report living in city or town; 15, or 5.7 per cent, are receiving incomes from churches and charities; 7, or 2.6 per cent, are receiving income from friends and relatives; 8, or 3 per cent, are receiving incomes from roomers; and 13, or 5.4 per cent, have miscellaneous other source of income.

Home Ownership

One hundred and ten, or 40.4 per cent, own their own homes; 147, or 57.9 per cent, do not own homes; and 4, or 1.7 per cent, own land.

Children of Pensioners

There are 644 married children who have 1,851 children of their own or an average of 2.8 children. There are 89 single children and 22 children whose conjugal state is unknown. The 261 pensioners have a total of 755 children or an average of 2.85 children per pensioner.

The occupation of the pensioners' male children discloses the fact that most of them are laborers, farmers and factory hands probably not making much more than a living for their own family.

Kentucky

On March 25, 1926, the Governor of Kentucky signed an Act "Providing for the protection and assistance of aged needy persons in the Commonwealth of Kentucky and allowing the counties to adopt the provisions of this act and prescribing penalties for violation of the provisions hereof." The law was to become effective June 24, 1926.

Like the Wisconsin law, the Kentucky Act leaves the decision of adopting the old age pension system to the fiscal court of county commissioners of each of the counties of the State. It also provides that any county may abandon such system after having operated under it for one year or more. Old age pensions under this law may be paid to persons 70 years of age and over who have been citizens of the United States for 15 years and residents of the State and county for at least 10 years immediately preceding the date of application. The amount of the pension is to be fixed by the county judge with due regard to the conditions in each case but it cannot exceed $250 per year. Excluded from pensions are professional beggars, persons able to earn any sum in excess of $400 per year or those having incomes from any source in excess of $400 per year, or those who have property to the value of $2,500 or more.

The Kentucky law follows the Wisconsin provisions in making the county judge the old age pension authority. Applications are to be filed with the county judge of the county in which the applicant resides. The county judge is to investigate and decide upon the application and fix the amount of the pension and the decision of the county judge is final. Unlike the Wisconsin law, however, the State of Kentucky makes no appropriation and establishes no state centralization of the system. All moneys are to come out from the county funds and no central system of administration or supervision is provided. As this report is being sent to press, of the 120 counties in Kentucky addressed on whether they had accepted the provsions of this law, 85 replied that they had not yet done so.

The Massachusett's System of Savings Bank Life Insurance

What may be described as the only functioning voluntary old age insurance plan in the Union has been established in Massachusetts since June, 1908. Under this system savings banks are authorized to establish insurance departments which may issue policies upon the lives of persons, and sell annuities in accordance with the regulations provided by the State insurance commissioner. These savings banks have no stockholders and are operated solely for the benefit of the depositors. "The system is founded on the theory that life insurance for persons of small means should be conducted as a social service and not as a commercial undertaking". In addition to the sale of several forms of life insurance, old age annuities at various ages may be purchased from these savings banks. The insurance plan also offers the opportunity to employers of labor to purchase "single premium annuities" for their workers. The system is operated under the direction of the General Insurance Guaranty Fund made up of seven trustees appointed by the Governor and is in charge of a Deputy Commissioner for savings bank life insurance, who is appointed by the trustees with the approval of the governor and council. A detailed description of the entire plan as well as the various forms of insurance sold, was given in the 1919 report of the Old Age Pension Commission (pp. 240-244).

In spite of the fact that the Massachusetts plan for life insurance and annuities offers insurance at considerable lower rates than may be secured from private insurance companies, and despite the further fact that the savings banks have more than doubled their life insurance business during the past four years, the total number of annuity contracts written during the entire 18 years existence of the system totaled only 487 at the end of November 1926 and the reserve on these annuities was only about $300,000 for the entire State of Massachusetts. The experience in the Bay State would seem sufficient to bear out the conclusions reached every-where abroad that a voluntary insurance system can never be made an effective means of meeting the needs of the aged, and that conditions in this country do not much differ in this respect from those found abroad.

State Studies of Old Age Dependency and Pensions

Although only eight state legislatures have taken definite action on the subject of old age pensions and in but four of these are there now such laws on the statute books, a formidable number of states have shown considerable interest in the subject by the appointment of investigating commissions to study the conditions of the aged in their respective territories and to report on improved methods of care for the superannuated poor.

The first official study of the subject of old age dependency and pensions in the United States was authorized by the Massachusetts' Legislature of 1907. Since that time several other commissions to further study the subject have been created in that State and reports were made in 1910, 1914, 1915, 1916, 1917 and 1925.[4] In 1915, the Industrial Commission of Wisconsin brought out a report on old age pensions.[5] The Social Insurance Commission of California reported on the subject in 1917.[6] The same year, in addition to the creation of the First Commission to investigate the subject of old age pensions in Pennsylvania, the legislature of the State of Ohio created a Commission on Health Insurance and Old Age Pensions. Both of these commissions submitted comprehensive reports in 1919.[7] The Pennsylvania Commission was continued and reported again in 1921.[8] While another report was presented to the Legislature in 1925 by the Old Age Assistance Commission.[9] During 1917, commissions were also created by the States of Illinois and New Jersey but these did not make exhaustive reports on the subject of old age.[10] In 1919, the Connecticut Commission on Public Welfare reported briefly on the subject of old age pensions.[11] In 1921, the Legislature of Montana requested the Industrial Accident Board of that State to investigate the conditions of the aged and a report was made in 1922.[12] The Indiana legislature of 1923 created a Commission to study the conditions of the poorhouses in the State and to report on a more "humane as well as a more economic method" of caring for the poor. This Commission made its report in 1925.[13] In 1924, the Virginia Legislature appointed a Committee "to make a thorough investigaton and study the question of providing and regulating assistance to destitute persons in the State over the age of 70 years and to recommend such legislation as it may deem expedient and advisable". This Committee reported to the 1926 legislature.[14] The New York State Legislature in 1926 appointed a Commission to study the conditions among the needy aged of the State "with the purpose of devising a state policy in connection with the welfare of the aged, and recommending legislation to carry such policy into effect". This Commission has, as yet, made no report. Commissions to study the subject are reported to have been created in 1925 also by the legislatures of the States of Colorado and Minnesota.[15]

Studies of Massachusetts' Commissions

References to the early Reports of the Massachusetts' Commissions have already been made in previous studies of the Pennsylvania Commissions. The Report on Old Age Pensions by the Commission on Pensions submitted in November, 1925, is a comprehensive one and presents some interesting disclosures on the conditions of the aged in the Bay State. Among the high points of these disclosures are the following:

Of the number of 17,357 persons 65 years of age who have been interviewed throughout the State, it was found that 1,114, or 6.4 per cent, have incomes under $100 per year, while 2,912 besides, or 16.8 per cent of the total aged population, have no incomes at all. Of those interviewed over the age of 70, about 8 per cent have incomes under $100, and nearly 21 per cent have no incomes at all. Of those interviewed over 75 years of age, 9.4 per cent have incomes under $100, and 25 per cent have no income at all. If the larger cities of the State alone were to be taken, the percentages of extreme poverty indicated by this research would be considerably higher. In Boston, for instance, the percentage of aged persons without any property or income whatever in the age group over 65 is about 25 per cent of that group in that city, and for those 70 years of age and over, about 29 per cent. It is also to be added that the figures given do not include persons in receipt of public or private organized charity, the inclusion of whom would considerably increase these percentages. The majority of the Commission conclude:

We think we are well within the truth in saying that these facts show a state of need among the aged population of Massachusetts far beyond what had been anticipated or is realized by the general public. They seem clearly to call for a general and well-organized system of relief or assistance on the part of the State as a sign of the hardships which so largely now overwhelm them in old age, and to obviate the fear of the stigma of pauperism which under present conditions is shown strikingly by these figures, and which forms a large part of the life of a considerable proportion of the populatiion as their earning power decreases and finally vanishes. We conceive that the obligation to avert this condition of affairs in old age rests upon the Commonwealth and upon its population as a whole; and we, therefore, recommend the adoption in Massachusetts of a comprehensive system of old age assistance, so administered by a central authority, with widespread local aid, as to give adequate protection to the aged people who are in extreme need, without using any such machinery as might in public estimation throw a shadow of pauperism over the beneficiaries.

Living up to Bay State traditions the Commission divided in their recommendations. The majority of the Commission recommended the establishment of a pension system for persons 70 years of age and over who can comply with certain qualifications, which on the whole are similar to those required in the Pennsylvania Old Age Assistance Act of 1923. A non-contributory pension system is recommended and the reasons for these recommendations are based not only on the fact that a contributory plan could not become effective for a considerable time whereas the need is immediate, but the majority opinion also warns against the difficulties to be incurred in the establishment of a contributory system. The Commission declares:

The problem of collecting annual contributions from the general population of the State would be wholly impracticable in view of the numerous changes of employment and occupation on the part of many of our population and the frequent periods of business depression, as well as the enormous machinery which would be needed for the collection, recording, and proper tabulation of the contributions from so large a body of people as live in Massachusetts. Too many of the people do not derive their earnings in any case from fixed employment in factories or shops—and this is especially true of the women, particularly in domestic service—that the levy of a fixed amount as a deduction from earnings, for the sake of making provision for ultimate old age, would be complex and baffling to a degree which in our opinion would make the whole scheme impossible.

The last Massachusetts Commission has made careful calculations of the possible number of applicants who would be entitled under the provisions of the suggested law and they estimate that there would be approximately 18,000 qualified applicants and that the net cost would be in the neighborhood of $5,500,000 per annum. To meet this cost, the Commission recommended a poll tax of $2.00 a year for both men and women and the addition of one-half of one per cent to the State income tax.

The dissenting minority of the Massachusetts Commission are in agreement with the majority in their conclusions that the present system of caring for the aged poor is unsatisfactory. The dissenting minority, however, is not satisfied with the non-contributory pension plan suggested. They recommend the passage of an act giving the State Department of Public Welfare increased power to supervise the measures taken by local bodies for the care of aged citizens. The Department of Public Welfare under the Minority Commission's plan would be given complete authority over the local poor relief bodies which would secure the advantage of a centralized administration. In return or this right of supervision, the State, it was suggested, should reimburse the local authorities to the extent of one-third of the expenses incurred on these provisions for the aged.

Wisconsin

The Industrial Commission of Wisconsin in its report on old age relief declared that although it did not make any definite indorsement of any plan or scheme of old age pensions, its report "was rather a suggestive advocacy of legislation favorable to the idea". The Commission presented plans for old age relief which included both straight pensions and voluntary insurance. Its plan for a straight annuity provided for the granting of a pension at the age of 65, or 60 years if permanently incapacitated, to United States citizens after they had resided ten years in Wisconsin. Before a person could qualify for this pension, the plan also stipulated that he must be of good moral character and that he did not have property above debts, valued at more than $500, exclusive of a homestead, nor more than $2,000 inclusive of a homestead. The applicant could have also no income more than $300 per annum if married, nor more than $200 if single. The amount of pension was proposed to be "such a sum which, when added to the applicant's other means of support, from whatever source derived, will suffice for the reasonable comfort and well-being of the applicant, but no pension shall exceed the sum of $150 per annum per each person." In order to raise the necessary funds, the Commission suggested that one-half of it be furnished by the State and the other half by the county. The State's quota, it was proposed, "should be raised by a special poll tax of $1.50 per annum, upon all citizens of the State between the ages of 20 and 60". The Commission also proposed a State Insurance system which would sell old age insurance on weekly or monthly premiums and which should offer insurance to trade unions, fraternal organizations and employers of labor. The administrative expense of the fund, it was suggested, should be borne by the State. The provisions of the law now in force have already been described on pages 111-115.

California

In connection with its study of health insurance, the California Social Insurance Commission in a report submitted in January 1917, presented no definite conclusions in regard to the pensioning of the aged in California largely because the Commission believed that:

Old Age insurance presents such serious actuarial and financial problems that the Commission does not feel in a position to make any recommendation concerning it at this time. Further study of the problem, especially as to the comparative merits of the methods of compulsory insurance and straight old age pensions, would be required.

Mention has already been made of the fact that the California legislature in 1925 passed an old age pension bill. This bill was modeled after the Pennsylvania Act and was vetoed by the Governor.

Ohio

The Ohio Commission on Health Insurance and Old Age Pensions reported to the 1919 State Legislature. Its report presented extensive studies of the conditions of the aged in Ohio and the conditions of the inmates of the county infirmaries, the main disclosures of which have already been summarized in previous reports of Pennsylvania Commissions. The Ohio Commission recommended the following pensions system:

The State would provide for the payment of a weekly pension not exceeding $5.00 per week to all persons 65 years of age, but the combined pension and income of any such person shall not exceed $250 annually.

The following shall be excluded:

Aliens and persons who have been citizens for less than 15 years.

Persons who have not been residents of the State for 15 years.

Persons convicted of a penitentiary offense, within 10 years.

Persons who have disposed of any property in order to qualify for a pension.

Tramps and professional paupers.

A voluntary system should be established and administered at the expense of the State so that individuals may purchase annuities not to exceed $10 a week by regular payments or by lump sum purchase.

A person 65 years of age or over who qualifies for a pension, but does not take his pension until later, should receive the deferred pension, computed from the date of qualifications as an annuity when he does go on the pension roll.

The poperty in excess of $100 of any person who receives an old age pension shall, upon the death of such person, be transferred to the State for disposal and from the proceeds thereof shall be deducted the amount which has been paid to the pensioner. Any residue shall then be paid to the lawful heirs.

The old age pension system should be administered by a State Board of Pensions consisting of three members.

A county board of welfare should be created to combine all of the welfare work of the county, including administration of old age pensions, mothers' pensions and blind pensions. The board should be unpaid and should employ a county welfare director selected from a civil service list without regard to residence or political consideration.

A number of bills were presented in the Ohio legislature since the report of the Commission on Health Insurance and Old Age Pensions was made. A bill similar to that of the Pennsylvania law was introduced at the 1923 Legislature by initiative petition. It was referred to the voters during the November elections of that year and because of the lack of an educational campaign the bill was defeated.

Connecticut

In 1919, the Connecticut Commission on Public Welfare while it made an extensive study of its own of the problem of old age in that State concluded that:

We may criticize the ineffectiveness and the cost of existing forms of voluntary insurance against the disabilities of age, just as we may realize that a considerable burden is imposed on the State by the maintenance of those who, for one cause or another, are unable either to work or to find work and so become wholly dependent on the State or on private charity. Notwithstanding this, it is doubtful if the situation in Connecticut, with regard to the extent of the disability or the necessities of those who become so disabled is so accute as to call for the initial experiment in this report to be made by the General Assembly."

Montana

The Industrial Accident Board of Montana was not allowed sufficient funds to make investigations of its own. As a result the report was short although the Commission made some estimates on the cost of old age pensions and presented brief facts concerning the European pension systems. The Commission could not determine upon the proper kind of an old age pension law and it drafted no bill for this purpose. It did declare, however, that:

We are convinced that the matter of old age dependency is a larger problem than is now generally realized. We believe it to be a problem that demands solution by the adoption of some form of old age pensions. The haunting fear that gnaws at the heart of every normal man and woman is the fear that he or she, through misfortune, will be deprived of a competency during old age and left penniless and friendless, as an object of charity or as a subject for the poorhouse. The continual press of competition, the race for industrial supremacy, the commercial battle that is more and more becoming a survival of the fittest, must provide relief to those who are worn in the struggle to the point where they can no longer care for themselves. Old age pensions must become a reality if principles of humanitarianism are not to be divorced from the scheme of life under which we all live.

The old age pension law now in operation is described on pages 105-109.

Indiana

The Indiana Committee to Investigate the Question of Old Age Pensions made its report in February, 1925. It made a study of the conditions and costs of 58 of the 92 poorhouses in the State of Indiana and showed that the average monthly cost of maintaining a poor house inmate in that State was $36.38 per month. The Committee found that "it is costing the State about $1,000,000 to maintain the poorhouse old folks alone." The Commission concluded:

The above sum would pay for pensioning all the old folk, whether in the poor house or outside of it, whether in the poorhouse or outside of it, who feel the pinch of poverty from old age. Much more good could be done with that outlay, much more distress alleviated by the pension system. The superintendents of these "homes" in which there is no atmosphere of home, know this. They know that life in a poorhouse is a life repressed by rules, without consoling friendships to make up for the loss of freedom. Husbands are torn from wives and wives from husbands, and the motley crew of the feeble-minded, the diseased, and the deformed make up their only society. The smell of the poorhouse is on every hand. The sigma of pauperism—of being classed with the witless and the monstrosities of life— weigh on the tired soul. Many of these superintendents in our questionnaire frankly stated that an old age pension would enable these old folks to find better homes, and that the rest of the poor house inmates, the feeble-minded, the insane, the crippled, the blind, and the diseased could be cared for more efficiently in a few district hospitals—at less expense. The old age pension is the beginning of a movement to close up the poorhouses—these last relics of the middle ages—and put the enormous investment to better use.

In the light of a better civilization and Government, your Committee recommends to the members of the Seventy-fourth General Assembly of the State of Indiana, the enactment of an Old Age Pension Law.

Virginia

The Virginia Legislative Committee on Old Age Assistance in its report submitted to the 1926 Legislature pointed out that the total number of poorhouse inmates in Virginia on October 1, 1924, was 1,356. Of this number, 767 were in county almshouses and 589 in city almshouses. The total number over seventy years of age was 467. Of this number, 282, were white and 185 colored. Of the 282 white, 135 were men and 147 women, and of the 185 colored, 93 were men and 92 women. Of the total number of inmates, to-wit, 1,356, old age was the cause of destitution in 446 cases, the remaining 910 cases being due to other causes. The cost of maintaining the almshouses for the year, exclusive of the value of crops consumed, is shown to be $270,620.30. Dividing this cost by 1,356, the per capita cost is found to be $199.57.

The legislative committee concludes as follows:

Your committee is of the opinion that an old age assistance plan could be operated in Virginia at a less per capita cost than the present per capita cost of maintaining the aged poor in the almshouses. If the experience of Montana be taken as a criterion, the per capita allowance would be about $150 per annum as compared with the present per capita cost of $199 for maintaining the aged poor in the almshouses. The savings thus effected, without considering such of the overhead charges of operating the poorhouses as could not be reduced would be about $50 per capita per annum—a material sum. The cost of administering the old age assistance plan would be negligible, since existing officers and facilities would be utilized under the plan favored by your commttee. That plan is fully set forth in a bill which your committee has caused to be prepared. It is earnestly recommended that this bill be enacted into law.

The Committees' bill contains features of the various old age pension laws in the United States. It provides for pensions to be paid from the state treasury to all persons 70 years of age and upward. The amount is to be fixed with due regard to the conditions in each case but is not to exceed a total of 85 cents a day. The State Board of Public Welfare and independent local boards of public welfare are to administer the provisions of the Act.

Oregon

While officially, Oregon has as yet taken no steps toward old age pensions, great activity in behalf of an old age pension law has been displayed by the Oregon Old Age Pension League which has branches in many towns and is made up of representative groups in the State. An old age pension initiative bill was contemplated for submission to the voters of the State at the election in November, 1926. Sufficient names for the petition had already been obtained but on account of accidental reasons the initiative was not filed in time with the public officials. Leaders of the league feel certain of the passage of an old age pension law by the legislature in 1927. Most of the Oregon Senators are committed to this law, while ex-Governor Walter M. Pierce has written the League as follows:

I am in favor of old age pensions and shall recommend the enactment of such a law to the next legislature. I do not believe it would be vey expensive. It would abolish the poor house.

In his last message to the Oregon legislature, ex-Governor Pierce strongly urged the adoption of an old age pension law.

CHAPTER V.

Pension System Abroad

Introduction

Government protection against the misfortunes of old age, like the entire program of social insurance, is an outgrowth of the modern industrial development. As long as production was decentralized and the modern factory unknown, the necessity for such provisions was not apparent. But the industrial revolution at the end of the eighteenth century created a steadily increasing mass of workers who, in return for their labor at machines and with tools which they no longer owned, were receiving a wage barely sufficient for their immediate needs. While the spirit of the French revolution and the new industrial regime had liberated the European workman from his feudal masters, he was left to depend upon his daily earnings for his daily bread. He became completely helpless in case of incapacity from further work, in case of sickness, old age and unemployment. The new industrial era left him politically free but economically, in face of the risks which his new life brought him. destitute and forsaken. For a time the doctrine of laissez-faire and individualism—the dominant motive of the industrial epoch—caused the state to shut its eyes to all the new and difficult problems. Individualism during his period was rampant everywhere and it was fully believed that if only each one was to take care of himself all the new problems would solve themselves.

Why the State Took up the Cause of the Aged

As industry steadily developed and as more and more workers were congregated at work in larger and more extensive establishments, Europe soon discovered the fallacies of the ruthless acceptance of the doctrine of "each to himself." Before very long it became clear that unless the state did take some definite action in behalf of the economically weaker members of society, its very life, vigor and productivity was threatened for all time. The new industrial risks were eating into the very life of the rapidly growing working classes in all industrially developing nations. The grumbling and murmuring of the suffering masses grew more and more audible. For the very safety of the state and the welfare of its people it became necessary for the former to assume some definite responsibilities in the protection of the great masses against at least some of the exigencies of the times. Being still imbued with the spirit of laissez-faire, the state's activities at first were confined only to some of the most striking evils brought about by the industrial revolution, and in the beginning only the amelioration of these was sought through social legislation. The early action of the state was confined largely to the protection of workers engaged in the most dangerous occupations, such as in mining, railways, etc. and were mainly provisions against occupational exposure such as accidents, and the like.

Benevolent Employers Fail to Meet the Needs

But while the European states in the beginning hesitated and were timid in the measures undertaken by them to safeguard the mass of wage-earners against the hazards of the newly developed economic and social conditions, benevolent employers, inspired by the reform ideals of the period, their own generous impulses as well as by the realization of the value of a stable and contented labor force, began, even prior to the middle of the last century, to establish welfare institutions of their own, aiming to provide their workers with protection against the industrial risks. One needs to mention only the early welfare work undertaken by Robert Owen in England, Leclaire in France, the Krupps in Germany and the founders of the early textile mills in Lowell, Mass., in our own country to visualise the extent to which private industrial leaders have sought to protect their workers against the newly arising hazards. Following were middle of the last century a great many private pension funds were established in European countries and the great majority of these required some contributions from the workers. But these private institutions were in but rare instances able to guarantee the permanency of their provisions; and because of their diversity and scantiness, their charitable character and their confinement to only the larger and more benevolent employers they could not provide an adequate and final solution to the problem of removing the fears and insecurity of the worker's life as brought about by the changed conditions. Attempts on the part of the workers themselves to secure protection through the organization of mutual aid societies proved no more successful.

State Programs of Old Age Protection Now Accepted Everywhere

As the demand for protection in old age by wage-earners grew, the state's recognition of its responsibility towards these economic groups developed. At first, it was hoped that the state's encouragement of voluntary mutual aid or insurance plans would suffice to remedy the situation. Practically all the Latin countries attempted to meet their problem of the aged workers through the establishment of voluntary savings and insurance plans. Short experience with such provisions, however, proved everywhere that they could not succeed because it was found that the average working man's wages were but rarely sufficient to provide himself with protection against the vicissitudes of industry. As a result, practically all nations followed with State systems of compulsory insurance or straight pension grants from the public treasury. Thuswise the burden of old age protection was placed, at least in part, on the employers and the state under the obligatory insurance plans and on the public as a whole in the straight pension grants. Germany was the leader in the adoption of a comprehensive contributory insurance plan, while the English speaking countries, until recently, generally followed systems of straight government pensions. Of late, however, the tendency abroad is generally towards comprehensive contributory insurance systems. Great Britain, about a year ago, changed its straight pension plan to a contributory system, while some of the English colonies are discussing such action in the near future.

At the present time of the 37 foreign countries and States which have adopted some form of protection against all or certain classes of their aged wage-earners, 25 are operating under the contributory principle, 10 have straight systems of State pensions for their aged while only two still continue with exclusive voluntary insurance systems, although in at least one of these countries—Canada—a definite move towards a non-contributory pension system has been made and it will not be long before it will be adopted. Nineteen of these countries set the pensionable age from 60 to 65, 6 nations retire their male pensioners at age 70 and only one—Newfoundland—pays pensions to males at age 75. In 14 of the 25 states operating under the contributory plan, the funds are raised from contributions made by the employers, the employees and the State.

Spread of Old Age Provisions Abroad

The essential need of such legislation and its wide acceptance abroad in the last two and a half decades is significantly brought out when it is recalled that prior to the commencing of this century only five nations had adopted any form of state relief for their aged wage-earners as against the 36 foreign states now operating one form or another of relief for their aged workers. The total population of the nations which had inagurated some form of old age protection prior to the beginning of this century amounted to approximately 100,000,000, whereas the population now covered by such protection amounts to a total of at least 650,000,000, or more than six times the number, in 25 years. The population now covered by various forms of governmental systems of old age protection amounts to considerably more than one-third of the entire population of the world and to a great deal more than half of the civilized world. Of the large countries still remaining without any form of modern old age provisions are China, India, and the United States.[1] while of the industrially developed countries, the United States, as a nation, stands alone in its isolation. We alone, of all the countries, persist in ignoring all the changes brought about by the industrial development and, as a nation, still insist in applying early 17th century remedies to 20th century ills.

[1] That India too may desert our fold and we shall be left only in company with China would seem a warranted conclusion from the following editorial which appeared in The India Witness of October 20, 1926, a missionary paper published at Lucknow, India. Says the editorial:

A new venture in poor relief is being made in Baroda. His Highness the Gaekwar has set aside from personal funds a large amount as an endowment for charitable work. Out of the interest from this sum Rupees 10,000 annually has been assigned to the support of an infirmary for the maimed, old and destitute. The government of Baroda have added an annual grant of Rs 2,000 from state funds for the same purpose.

This princely generosity of Baroda's ruler deserves recognition by all who are interested in the welfare of people in need. We hope it may attract the attention of his fellow rulers of Indian States and that some of them will follow his lead in displaying brotherly concern for the aged, the maimed and the poor of all sorts in their territories.

We wish that detailed information were available concerning the plans for conducting the infirmary. The bringing together of all sorts and conditions of poor people into one institution is open to the most serious objection. Honourable people ought not to be driven by hunger or any other servant of poverty to live in contact with drunkards and criminals. The latter if poor should not be neglected but they certainly ought not to be brought into association with people to whom their presence will be an affliction or a menace. Likewise inmates of an institution who suffer from an infectious or a contagious disease should be segregated from other patients, without respect to the merit or respectability of the latter, with as much care as would be exercised in the home of an enlightened man of wealth.

Poor houses, as usually conducted, are a disgrace to humanity, and any increase in their number would be lamentable. We hope that His Highness, the Gaekwar, who has long been known as a progressive ruler, with the aid of his Government will provide for the new infirmary an administration in thorough accord with sound social science, and particularly that the programme of relief will not be confined to service in the institution. Helping such of the poor as with assistance can maintain themselves in their own homes, however humble the latter may be, is vastly superior to general concentration in an institution, however well-conducted it may be.

Argentina

Local system of pensions for state, provincial and municipal official were in existence in Argentina for many years. The first federal compulsory insurance law against old age and sickness was adopted early in 1919 and covered the railwaymen. In 1921, a contributory old age pension scheme for wage-earners and salaried employes of all public-service companies such as tramway systems, telephones, telegraph, gas, electricity, water service, etc., was set up. Retirement was made possible at age 50 after 30 years of service. The contributions from employees are; (1) 5 per cent deducted from salary; (2) the first monthly salary; (3) the first monthly increment when employee receives an increase of salary. The employers contribute: (1) eight per cent of all salaries up to 1,000 pesos;[2] (2) all previously existing pension funds, and (3) all fines. The state contributes a certain amount as determined by actuaries.

In October 1923 a compulsory insurance law for bank employees was enacted.

Compulsory Insurance Act of 1923

The general compulsory old age and sickness insurance Act of November, 1923, was a result of considerable agitation on the part of the workers in Argentina for a law covering all workers. The following classes of workers were made compulsory subject to the Act:

(1) Wage-earners and salaried employees in the Argentine Mercantile Marine;

(2) Wage-earners and salaried employes permanently occupied in industrial undertakings;

(3) Wage-earners and salaried employees in journalism and the printing trades;

(4) Wage-earners and salaried employes in commercial houses; wage-earners and salaried employees in mutual benefit societies and trade unions were allowed to participate in the advantages of the Act on condition that they pay the employer's contribution.

Persons under 18 years of age and home-workers were excluded from the benefits of the Act. On the other hand, there was no upper limit of wages.

The benefits provided for were of four different kinds:

(a) Ordinary superannuation allowance;

(b) Special pension granted in case of sickness;

(c) Special pension granted to employes who became incapacitated for work in the course of their employment;

(d) Pension payable to the family of the deceased worker;

The amount of the pension and the exact conditions for their grant were to be finally determined by a technical committee within a maximum period of two years from the coming into force of the Act.

Administration

For each of the four categories of insured persons mentioned in the Act there was created a special independent fund, the administration of which was entrusted to the Managing Committee of Social Welfare Funds (Directorio de las Cajas de Provisiones Sociales). This organization, consisted of a president appointed by the Government, with the approbation of the Senate, and of eight members of whom four represented the workers and four employes, with an equal number of substitutes.

Sources of Funds

There was no State subsidy to this Fund. The burden of insurance was to fall solely on the insured persons and on the employers.

The contribution of the insured person was composed of:

(1) A sum equal to 5 per cent of the monthly wage. If the wage was more than 1500 pesos the calculation was made solely on the part of the wage below this limit

(2) The first month's salary paid to the insured person on his entry into one of the undertakings covered by the Act. As this payment could not fail to have the result of placing the insured person in a difficult financial position, the Act provided for its distribution over 10 months. Insured persons who were already in an occupation at the time when the Act came into force also had to pay a contribution equal to one months' wage, but they could fulfil this obligation in 24 installments.

(3) The first month's increment when the wage-earner or salaried employee receives an increase in his wages or salary.

The employers were obliged under this Act to pay to the fund a monthly contibution equal to 5 per cent of the total wages paid to their permanent staff. When the wages of the employed person were more than 1500 pesos, the calculation was made only on that part of it below this limit.

The insurance funds were also to be augmented by interest on capital, by fines and by other resources specially provided for the purpose, which were to be defined later.

The employers' and workers' contributions were to be paid by the employer to the nearest branch of the National Argentine Bank, or to a postoffice, on behalf of the fund for which they were destined.

Financial Organization

The Management of the Fund was to draw up an annual budget, which was afterwards to be submitted for the approval of the Government. All the expenses were to be checked by the General Accounting Department of the Republic. Benefits for insured persons were to be fixed on an actuarial basis by a special committee appointed by the management of the Welfare Funds.

The cost of administration of the funds was to be covered from the general reserve of the fund, but were not to exceed 3 per cent of the reserve.

Law Suspended

Because of the large contributions required and because the public was left in the dark as to the time when benefits were to begin as well as the amounts of these, the insurance law when it began to be applied set up a storm of protests both from the workers and from the employers. The employers complained that the contribution constituted an excessive burden on industry and commerce. The Socialist Party, on the other hand, desired the introduction of a general social insurance scheme, while the workers' groups affiliated to the communist movement clamored for a non-contributory scheme. The president, at first was determined to enforce the new Act by all means in his power but finally gave way in face of the general discontent and suspended the law. Meanwhile during the first year of operation of the law about 30,000,000 pesos were received by the Fund in contributions, while the subscribers numbered about 100,000.

As the opposition continued, the management of the Fund took legal action against those employers who refused to comply with the requirements of the act. The Supreme Court of Argentina in a judgment given at the beginning of 1926 decided, however, that the National Pensions Fund could not legally enforce the law on employers who did not carry out their legal obligations. This decision, mainly based on the fact that the administratve organs of the Fund were incompletely constituted and the Act vaguely drawn naturally resulted in a general suspension of all legal action against persons contravening the Act, and the Act thus became virtually a dead letter . The inevitable result of this was that contributions fell away and public interest in the scheme waned.

According to a recent dispatch in the American Press "the noise made over the pensions act at last found an echo in the National Congress and motion to suspend it was passed by the Senate and then obstructed for many months in the Chamber of Deputies by the bloc that had fathered the bill. But five minutes of fast work by a bare majority was sufficient and it was announced that the executions and effects of the law are hereby suspended until such a time as the honorable Congress shall modify it or sanction another law to take its place."

Provincial Systems—Province of Cordoba

While the Federal Government was discussing the establishment of a general scheme of social insurance, some of the Argentine provinces attempted to solve their own problem of old age dependency through provincial laws. The province of Cordoba in 1920 passed a law which provided a straight system of old age pensions to all its inhabitants. The conditions of eligibility to such pensions are as follows: the applicant must be: (1) 60 years of age: (2) of Argentine nationality or one who has had 30 years residence in Argentina and 10 years' residence in the province; (3) not to have an income of more than 30 pesos per month, and (4) not to have been convicted of any crime. The pension is fixed at 30 pesos per month.

The law also provides that when a worker dies or becomes incapacitated his dependents are entitled to a benefit amounting to a sum equal to 3 months' wages in case of death; and 2 months' wages in case of invalidity. If death occurs during unemployment, an allowance of 2 months' salary is granted the survivors. The law also provides for maternity benefits.

Administration

The administration of the law is in the hands of the Bureau of "Protection Obrera" (workers' protection) in the department of labor. In 1921, the first year when the law became operative, there were about 100 pensioners on the list.

Province of Mendoza

In 1924 the Province of Mendoza followed the example of the Province of Cordoba. The pension given amounts to 50 pesos per month. The conditions for the receipt of a pension are the same as in the province of Cordoba except the retirement age in this province is set at 65. The Mendoza law grants an invalidity pension of 50 pesos.

How Funds are Raised

The funds necessary for the payment of pensions are raised in the following manner: (1) a monthly tax of 50 centavos paid by all employers, and by the State and towns as employers, for all their employees; (2) a tax on all property the value of which exceeds 200,000 pesos; (3) a tax on all uncultivated land, and (4) a tax of 5 centavos per quintal of grapes.

Administration

The fund is administered by a board of directors whose President is the Director of the Department of Labor of the Province and by one deputy and one Senator elected by the provincial parliment and by two representatives of the workers elected by workers' associations.

Australia

The Australian Invalid and Old Age Pensions Act was passed on June 10, 1908, and became effective July 1, 1909. This act superseded the previous old age pension systems established by the separate states of New South Wales, Queensland and Victoria and was made to apply to the entire Commonwealth, including the States of New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, West Australia, Queensland and Tasmania. Amendments to the law were made in 1909, 1912, 1919, 1920, 1923 and 1925.

The Australian law grants pensions to all men over 65 years of age and women above the age of 60. Permanent incapacity for work makes it possible for a man to receive a pension at 60. Pensions are given to persons who have been residents of Australia for at least 25 years. They must also be of good character and not to have been imprisoned for four months within 5 years in the last 25 years. Pensions are refused to claimants who are wife-deserters, drunkards etc., and are not given to those who own property above £400. The law excludes from the pension right, Asiatics or aboriginal natives of Australia, Africa, New Zealand or the Islands of the Pacific. Naturalized citizens are entitled to a pension from the time of their naturalization. Documentary evidence must be produced as to the age of the claimant for old age pensions, or the Commissioner may himself accept the claimant's statement as to age if no documentary evidence is available.

Pension Grant

No uniform or fixed pension amount is provided. The law specifies that the amount of pension shall be "at such rate as, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, the Commissioner who determines the pension claim deems reasonable and sufficient". The maximum pension was originally 10s.[3] per week, but was increased to 12s. 6d. in October, 1916; to 15s in January, 1920; and to 17s. 6d. in September 1923.* Claimants with incomes of £65 a year, are excluded from pensions. Pensioners are required to submit a statement of their financial conditions once a year. Where the pensioner has property, the pension is reduced to the extent of one pound for every ten pounds of the net property exceeding £50 exclusive of the home, or above £100 including the home. When both husband and wife are pensioners, deduction in case of each of them is one pound for every ten pounds of net property above 25 pounds. Board and lodging are counted for ten shillings a week. Gifts or allowances given to a pensioner by children, grand-children and relatives, etc., are not included in the income. Contributions from friendly societies and from trade-unions are not taken into account to lessen the pension.

*An amendment of 1925 raised the maximum pension to £52 a year.

Administration

The administration of the Australian Old Age Pensions Act is in the hands of a Commissioner of Pensions for the Commonwealth. The Commissioner is assisted by a deputy commissioner in each state. Each state is further divided into districts, each of which is placed in charge of a registar. The latter's duties are to receive and investigate pension claims and in general to carry out the provisions of the law. The Pension Commissioner and his deputies are empowered to summon witnesses, receive evidence on oath and to require the production of books and documents. The district registrar after proper investigation makes a recommendation to a local magistrate who makes a further recommendation, whereupon the application is transmitted to the deputy Commissioner. The pension certificate is then issued either by the deputy or Commonwealth Commissioner.

Invalidity Pensions

In addition to the old age pensions, the Australian act also provides for an invalidity pension payable to any person above 16 years of age, who is permanently incapacitated for work, provided that the person shall have resided in Australia for at least 5 years. The claimant for an invalidity pension must also have no claim upon an employer for accident compensation and not to have property or income in excess of the pension amount. The law also provides that permanently incapacitated persons should include the permanently blind.

Ratio of Cost and Average Pensions

The total cost of pensions in Australia has so far been on the increase. This is due to the steadily rising number of pensioners as well as the increased pension allowances. The ratio of administrative cost, on the other hand, has declined steadily having amounted to but 1.4 per cent in 1924 as compared to 4 per cent in the beginning of the system. In 1924, 80.2 per cent of the aged and 90.7 per cent of the invalid pensioners were receiving the maximum pension of £45 10s. The average fortnightly pension in 1924 was 33s. 9d.[4] On June 30, 1924 there were in the Commonwealth of Australia 197 aged and 74 invalid pensioners for every 10,000 of the population.[5]

A recent report of the Royal Commission on National Insurance[6] sheds some interesting light as to the problems of the Australian Old Age Pension Law which because of conditions approximating more closely those in the United States, are of significance to those concerned with the same problem in this country. According to this Commission:

Report of Commission on National Insurance

Statistics indicate that of every 100 people born in Australia, approximately 50 will be living at age 65, and, of these 16, representing 32 per cent of the survivors at that age and 16 per cent of those born in Australia, will be claimants for the old age pension. Practically no variation has taken place since the institution of the Commonwealth old age pension in the percentage of the population of eligible age who claim the pension, but it is an astounding fact that one in every six persons born in Australia will eventually become a claimant for the old age pension. On June 30, 1912, 34,897 males and 44,174 females, totalling 79,071 persons, were in receipt of Commonwealth old age pensions, being equivalent to 33 per cent of the male population, 31 per cent of the female, and 32 per cent of the total population eligible according to age. On June 30, 1924, the numbers in receipt of old age pensions had increased to 45,117 males and 67,937 females, totalling 113,054 persons and equivalent to 34 per cent males and 32 per cent females, and approximately 33 per cent of the total population at the eligible ages; the large number of females being due to the fact that women are admitted at age 60. Australian conditions tend towards a greater probability of people reaching old age than in other countries.

When old age pensions were first introduced they were surrounded with so many restrictions that it has been suggested they were allowances in case of poverty, and consequently applicants did not like having such an imputation placed upon them. Nowadays there is less reluctance to claim the pension, and the number of claimants, so it is stated, is now greater because of the liberalization of the scheme, and the greater adequancy of the pension, which now attracts more people, especially as the cost of living has increased considerably in recent years. It will be seen, however, from the above mentioned statistics, that although the number of old age pensioners has increased considerably, the percentage of the population eligible according to age in receipt of such pensions has remained practically stationary, the increase in numbers being due to the growth in population, and to the fact that, as previously indicated, a greater percentage of the population is now in the eligible age groups.

Commission Recommends Contributory Pensions

The Royal Commission declared itself in favor of a compulsory national contributory insurance law which shall provide for the payment of sickness, invalidity, accident and superannuation benefits to insured members. Its arguments for superannuation benefits are presented as follows:

The average working life of the wage-earner varies in the several industries, and a satisfactory basis of insurance for all wage-earners is possible under a national scheme only, as under sectional schemes the varying circumstances are advantageous to a group of wage-earners in some instances and disadvantageous to others. The provision of an adequate superannuation benefit under National Insurance is a great incentive to the wage-earner, as is assists him to provide against impecunious old age, the possibility of which probably weighs more heavily upon him than the risks of sickness or accident. A systematic method of providing for a definite superannuation benefit will grant such relief that the wage-earner will be enabled to give more effective consideration to the questions associated with the proper upbringing and maintenance of his children. It has been suggested that an annuity system should be instituted enabling those who so desire to contribute for a larger amount of pension, as such provision should be attractive to many who are in receipt of higher wages, but they have not proved satisfactory, owing to the inability of many wage-earners to accurately forecast their capacity to regularly pay the additional contributions required, with the result that many members discontinue contributing for the higher benefits. Benefits and contributions based on wages make the system very complex and necessitate a very appreciable increase in the administration cost of the scheme, which is not compensated for by the increase in benefits.

The Royal Commission recommended that in the National Insurance System to be instituted provisions should be made for a superannuation benefit of 20s. per week payable to male insured members after attainment of age 65 and for female insured members after attainment of age 60. The weekly contribution required to meet the cost of such pensions would be as follows:

Age of Entry	Men		Women
16	0	9.4	1	7.3
25	1	3.0	2	7.5
35	2	3.2	4	10.4
45	4	7.8	10	8.4

The ommission also recommended that the existing rights of pensioners under the Commonwealth invalid and Old Age Pensions Act 1908-1923 should not be interfered with.

Effects of Pensions on Thrift

As to the general effects of old age pensions, the Commission declared:

It has been suggested that the payment of old age pensions on the basis of service rendered to the community tends to discount thrift, whilst voluntary schemes fail to attract other than the more hrify. There is no evidence, however, o support the former suggestion.

The last conclusions of the Royal Commission are supported further by a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions of Australia to the Pennsylvania Commission, in which the former declares:

The experience of the Pensions Administration is that the system has operated successfully. Our experience has been that the operation of the pensions law has in no way injured the morale of people because of its protection in old age, nor has it been found to discourage thrift. On the contrary, reviews of pensions have frequently shown that, after being granted pensions the recipients have commenced to earn or, if already employed, that they have considerably increased their earnings and in various ways added to their property. In very many instances this has occurred to such an extent that it has become necessary to cancel the pensions because the pensioners were earning at such a rate, or had accumulated such an amount of property, as to render them no longer eligible to receive payment.

Austria

Like Germany, Austria has been one of the pioneer countries in the field of social insurance. Accident and sickness insurance have been in operation in Austria since 1888. In the case of old age and indivalidity insurance, however, Austria has been more laggard. The first such law did not come until the passage of the Act of December, 1906, which established a limited system of contributory old age invalidity, and death insurance, restricted to certain employees in commercial and industrial undertakings. Owing to the inadequate provisions of this act, this system failed to justify the hopes which have been placed in it. It has been badly organized from the beginning and the maximum wage groups included in the insurance system were those earning 3,000 kronen ($609 par.). Workers earning annual salaries in excess of that amount were not covered under the plan. The pensions also were very small while the premiums were comparatively high. A number of bills aiming to improve this act were discussed in parliment prior to the beginning of the World War but no new legislation was enacted.

As the law stands, an old age pension is paid, in the case of insured men, either after 40 years of contribution at any age, or may be paid after 5 years of contribution on reaching the age of 70. In case of women, only 35 years of contributions are required, when the age of 55 has been reached, or after 5 years of contribution ofter reaching the age of 65. The amount of the pension varies with the salaried classes and the number of contributions made. Pensions of half the amounts are also paid to the widows of insured persons, who drew an invalidity or old age pension during their lives or have acquired a right to such a position.

Pensions Since the War

The World War brought the Austro-Hungarian monarchy to an end. Austria became a Republic and was faced with innumerable difficulties of reorganization. Despite the economic, social, political and financial disorganzaton of the country an attempt was made to remedy some of the social the depreciation of the currency the maximum wage groups insurance deficiencies by the act of July, 1920. Because of covered by insurance under this amendment were raised from 3,000 to 18,000 kronen while the benefits also were considerably increased. The period of premium payments necessary for ligibility to a person was reduced to 60 months, while a number of administrative reforms were instituted. In 1925 there were approximately 135,000 employees in commercial and industrial undertakings insured against the risks of invalidity, old age and death under this law.

The Proposed General Workers' Insurance Law

Since 1920 a number of social insurance bills have been discussed and introduced in the parliment at Vienna. In November, 1925, the Austrian government submitted to the Chamber of Deputies an important bill aiming to coordinate the various branches of social insurance into a single system of workers social insurance. According to the International Labor Office the provisions of this bill are as follows:[7]

Persons Subject to Insurance

The following persons are to be subject to insurance: wage-earners in industry and commerce, including apprentices, domestic servants and home workers. Exceptions, which are at present somewhat numerous, especially in the branch of accident insurance, are to be abolished.

The Bill takes no definite position as regards the insurance of workers in agriculture and forestry, and leaves the question of their inclusion to the initiative of Parliment. This attitude is due to the fact tha he constitutional change by whch legislative competence in the mater of social insurance for workers in agriculture and forestry was given to the Central Government, only came into force on October 1, 1925, and it was found impossible to include agricultural wage-earners in the present bill without retarding by several months its submission to the Chamber.

Benefits

The Bill provides for benefits in kind and in cash in the event of the illness of the insured person or of a member of his family, maternity, unemployment, accident, invalidity, old age and death.

Benefits in cash vary according to the wage class of the insured person. There are ten classes, the highest of which includes workers earning not more than 7.2 shillings,[8] per day.

Invalidity Benefits

The invalidity pension is granted to all insured persons who are unable to earn more than one-third the wages usually earned by wage-earners of the same category, on condition that such persons have paid their insurance contributions for a minimum number of weeks. The rate of pension varies with the contribution, which itself depends on the wage. The maximum pension is respectively 69 and 44 schillings per month according as the number of weekly contributions is higher or lower than 500. In no case may the pension be lower than 12 shillings. For each child dependent on him the pensioned person is entitled to a supplement.

[8]Schilling at par 14.07 cents.

Old Age Pensions

The invalidity pension is due in the form of an old age pension to each insured person when he reaches the age of 65 years, provided he has paid contributions for at least 500 weeks. The rate of pension is increased when the insured person does not demand to be paid at the age of 65 years.

The widow's pension is only paid for 12 consecutive months after the death of the insured person. None-theless, the pension is granted permanently when the widow is older than 55 years of age or if she has at least two children dependent on her. The orphan's pension is paid until the orphan reaches the age of 16 years.

Financial Resources

A single contribution is to cover the whole system. It amounts in principle to 15 per cent of the average wage of the wage class to which the insured person belongs, and is divided equally between the employer and the insured person. Of the total contribution, 6.75 per cent of the wage is earmarked for sick benefits, 4.5 per cent for unemployment allowance, and the remainder for accident, invalidity, old age, and death benefits, as well as for administrative charges.

The State is responsible for a subsidy to invalidity, old age and death benefits. Further, it contributes to unemployment insurance expenses when they exceed 60 million schillings per annum. In all, contributions from public funds will not exceed one-eighth of the total expenses of the insurance system.

Proposed Old Age Insurance Law for Independent Workers

The just described Worker's Insurance Bill now before the Austrian Chamber of Deputies provides that the branches of insurance relating to invalidity, old age and death shall come into force simultaneously with the insurance system to be set up in behalf of independent workers who as a class under post-war conditions, the government considers are just as much in need of an insurance system as wage-earners.

According to the Austrian Ministry of Social Administration[9] this bill provides that:

All members of industrial associations are subject to compulsory insurance irrespective of nationality, sex, or income. In addition any member may insure hmself for an invalidity pension by payment of voluntary contributions.

An old age pension is provided for all insured persons over sixty-five; the annual pension amounts to one-third of the total sum contributed by the beneficiary, subject to a minimum of 240 schillings, plus one-eighth of the sum contributed. In case of death, the amount of annual pension acquired or in course of acquisition is granted to the insured person's assigns.

The insurance funds are to be derived exclusively from beneficiaries' contributions, which amount to 72 schillings per head per annum and are paid by means of stamps affixed by each insured person in his insurance book and applied by the post offices towards the insurance funds. At the end of the year, the association to which the insured person belongs will examine the books and collect outstanding contributions, any unpaid contributions being pooled and provided for by supplements to the membership rates of the association.

The insurance of independent workers is to be carried out by an old age insurance fund to be administered under State control by representatives of the insured person.

Belgium

The history of old age provision in Belgium may be said to typify the trend of the movement in a number of countries. Its development in Belgium may be divided into three stages. (1) The period of voluntary savings or insurance; (2) straight government pension grants; (3) compulsory contributory insurance.

Voluntary Savings Plan

The Belgian "General Savings and Retirements Funds" was originally founded in 1850 at the same time when the French Fund was established. As in the case of all voluntary insurance plans, it was created for the purpose of inducing wage-earners to provide for their old age by affording them opportunities to save under the protection of the government. During the fifty years that followed the establishment of this fund many devices were employed to attract a greater number of persons to make deposits. This was done by reducing still further the minimum of deposits, by influencing children from six to fourteen years of age to join the fund and by appropriations for annual subsidies made by the national and provincial governments to mutual aid societies and similar organizations which induced their members to join the fund. In spite of all these encouragements, however, there was little success made in securing any considerable number of wage-earners to make deposits and provide for their old age.

In 1900, a law was enacted which sought further to encourage wage-earners to provide annuities for old age by adding state subsidies to their own deposits and by giving special grants to the needy aged. The law permitted any person over 18 years of age to pay into the fund for himself or for another person. The depositors were not required even to make regular payments either at fixed periods or of a fixed amount. The minimum of deposit was one franc.[10] The principal aim of this fund was to attract the poorer classes, as the law excluded from benefits those classes who paid above a certain maximum amount in taxes or license, as well as state officials who were entitled to old age pensions by virtue of previous laws. The annuities were paid at the age of 65 and could not exceed 1,200 francs. In addition to the regular annuity the government made a contribution in the form of a premium which was added to the sums paid by the insured.

Even these govenment subsides did not prove sufficiently attractive to the old people. The amounts were therefore increased by an amendment passed in 1903. The latter provided a government allowance of one hundred per cent on the first six francs deposited by a person who on January 1, 1903, was between the ages of 40 to 45; the subsidy increased to 150 per cent for those who were between the ages of 45 to 50 on that date, and amounted to 200 per cent on the first six francs for those persons who were 50 years old at the time the law was enacted.

Straight Government Grants

While these extraordinary subsidies increased the number of depositors substantially, it was found that the savings fund could not meet the immediate problem of old age. The Belgian government, therefore, in addition to subsidizing savings, practically established a system of temporary old age pension grants. These pensions were given to all persons 65 years of age and over, provided they were Belgian subjects and had been residing in Belgium at least one year prior to their application for relief. These State pension grants were given only to workmen, i. e. "men and women actually working with their hands for an employer, in consideration of a wage, whether such work be performed on time wage or piece wage, at home or away from home, and whether it be domestic, agricultural, industrial or handicraft work." The claimant, the law also specified must be in want, which was defined as "a state in which the resources of the person are insufficient to enable him to support himself and his family in accordance with the standard of comfort prevailing among workmen of his trade in the district in which he resided."

The amount of the straight pension given was very small, namely 65 francs per year. The pensions were orginally intended to cease in 1911 and government subsidies were to be given only to those who had made deposits in the savings fund. However, in May, 1911, the law was further extended to continue until 1914.

Extension of Straight Pension Grants

Following the World War and the depreciation of the Belgian currency, it became obvious that the existing provisions for old age could not meet the needs of the people. To meet the immediate problem a bill passed in August, 1920, granting pensions of from 600 to 720 francs a year to all needy aged persons 65 years of age and over. The lower pension was to be paid to residents of communities with 5,000 inhabitants or less while the higher was to be given to aged persons residing in centers with more than 25,000 inhabitants. The amount of the pension was to be reduced in accordance with a graded schedule of the applicant's independent income, but certain classes of income such as contributions from children, savings, etc. were made exempt. The cost of these grants was to be met as follows: five-eighths by the State, one-eighth by the province and two-eights by the commune. Municipal councils were entitled to demand that their old people be placed in a higher class. The commune could call on charitable institutions to help pay its share. In 1921, 221,407 pension certificates were issued under this Act.

The law of August, 1920 was introduced only as a temporary measure and was to last only a few years until a more comprehensive act could be passed by parliament. In January 1923 this law was extended for three more years. This was done in order to give the government time to pass and bring into operation the new compulsory contributory old age pension law.

Subsidies to Mutual Aid Societies

By an Act of April 1922 provision was made for the encouragement of mutual or friendly societies recognized by the State with a view to affiliating the members thereof to the Retirement General Fund, by granting to each of such members an annual subsidy of two francs to be added to the sum of three francs in each case where the member's book will show that said three francs were deposited to the credit of the Retirement General Fund, on condition that the operations and books of such mutual or friendly societies show no irregularities.

The provision of 1922 is also extended to nationals of other countries who have become residents of Belgium, provided the country of such nationals extend a similar benefit, under their old pension laws, to Belgians residing in such countries.

Contributory Old Age Pensions Act

In July, 1924 the Belgian Government finally introduced a bill providing for compulsory insurance of workers against old age and premature death. The bill was enacted on December 10, 1924, and became operative on January 1, 1926.

The general purpose of the law is to provide for the workers an income for old age and, in case of death, a life annuity for widows as well as the payment of temporary allowances to orphans. It is based upon the triple participation of the insured, the employers, and the State. It also guarantees, from the year it is put into effect, the grant of a temporary allowance which will increase the old age annuity and the payment to widows in cases where the insured person, because of his age, had been unable to establish an adequate annuity through the payments made to his account.

Scope of Act

Briefly the provisions of the law are as follows:

Insurance against old age and premature death is made compulsory for all persons of both sexes who work for an employer and whose annual pay does not exceed 12,000 francs. This maximum is increased 1,000 francs for each child under 16 years of age.

Persons employed by the State, provinces, communes, or other public services who are entitled to a free pension by reason of their employment, as well as those persons covered by the special laws relating to miners' pensions, are exempt from the provisions of this law.

Contributions

The premiums of insured persons are as follows: 1 franc a month for unmarried males under 18 years of age and for women and girls; 3 francs for others. The employer pays an equal amount. These premiums are payable until the insured person has reached the age of 65 years. For every franc paid into the insurance fund the State will pay annually 1 franc, for persons born between 1862 and 1869; 75 centimes, for those born between 1870 and 1875; 60 centimes, for those born between 1876 and 1881; and 50 centnmes, for those born since 1881. The maximum annual payment of the State is fixed at 288 francs per person.

[10] Franc at par 19.3 cents.

The payments of those compulsorily insured are deducted from their wages by the employer. The employer is assessed on all wage-earners employed by him at the periods fixed for the collection of the workers' premiums.

The premiums of insured persons and the employers' assessments are deposited in the general savings and retirement fund. To cover the costs of administration an annual subsidy will be paid to approved mutual associations which have for their purpose the affiliation of their members to the general savings and retirement fund for the purpose of the present law.

Benefits

The minimum old age pension is 720 francs, of which 480 francs is paid from the fund formed by the workers' and employers' payments and 240 francs from the contribution of the State. The widow's pension amounts to 360 francs, one-third of which is paid by the State. An annual allowance of 120 francs for each child under 16 years of age is paid to the widow or in the event of her death to the person having the children in charge. When a widow reaches her sixty-sixth year her annuity is increased to 480 francs. The pension ceases if she remarries. The insured person is exempt from establishing this annuity for his wife when she is entitled in her own right to an old age pension of 720 francs.

As long as the minimum compulsory payments of workers and employers are insufficient to produce an annuity of 720 francs, the State will pay to those reaching the age of 65 the amount necessary to bring the pension up to that figure.

Voluntary Insurance

Bonuses will be granted by the State to the beneficiaries of persons who have voluntarily made payments towards an old age pension and a survivor's annuity. Those who may receive this bonus are the wife of the insured and their children, 6 years of age or less and all persons not included in the compulsory provisions of the law whose income does not exceed 15,000 francs plus 500 francs for each child. These bonuses are given up to a maximum of 144 francs per annum. The rules governing voluntary insurance are similar to those for compulsory insurance except that there are no employers' contributions.

Salaried Workers' Pension Act

The Act of December 10, 1924 did not apply to salaried workers. To cover this class of workers a separate law was passed on March 10, 1925 providing for a compulsory insurance system against old age on somewhat different conditions. The contributions to this fund began on the first of January 1926 but payments will not begin until January 1, 1927.

Scope of Act

Insurance against old age and premature death is compulsory for all salaried employees of both sexes without regard to the amount of their remuneration. Exempted from the Act are employees of the State, provinces, and communes; employees in asylums, relief offices, pawnshops or public loan funds; and employees of the general savings and retirement fund and of associations serving as public utilities.

Contributions

The amount of the premium was fixed originally at 10 per cent of the employee's salary up to a maximum of 15,000 francs, 5 per cent being paid by the employer and 5 per cent by the employee. The maximum is increased 500 francs for each child under sixteen years of age in the care of the insured. In case the annual remuneration does not exceed 6,000 francs, however, the employee's contribution is reduced to 3 per cent. In June 1926, a change was made in the insured person's contribution which have been uniformly fixed at 3% of the salary.

The contributions of the State is the same as in the general system of the Act of December 10, 1924 and varies from 50 centimes to 1 franc but cannot exceed 288 francs per year. The participation of the State ceases as soon as an annual income of 240 francs is established in favor of the insured or his wife. No payment is made to the insurance fund by the State if the annual remuneration of the employee exceeds 15,000 francs. The premiums are payable until the insured person has reached the age of 65 years in the case of men and 60 years in the case of women.

The payments of those compulsorily insured are deducted from their salaries by the employer at stated periods and the employers' payment are due at the same time and under the same conditions as those of the employees.
